Stanfield Vows Full Support To Henderson

Mr. Henderson told the Commons public accounts committee that the government had decreased the effectiveness of the auditor-general staff by cutting salaries and diminishing job classifications.

Meanwhile Mr. Stanfield told a news conference that he has urged Conservative MPs to make a public assault on a government bill that would restrict the powers of the auditor-general.

Mr. Henderson's job is to report to Parliament—not the government—on the operations of federal departments, including cases of waste and inefficiency. He has raised government hackles with exposures of the refit expenses for the aircraft carrier Bonaventure, and costs of studies of a Prince Edward Island causeway.

BILL RESTRICTS POWERS

The accounts committee is studying a government bill introduced last month that would restrict the auditor-general's power to comment on government waste.

The bill would limit his role to book-keeping—auditing the accounts kept by individual departments.

Mr. Henderson told the committee the government had already tried to impair his effectiveness by downgrading the "core of my staff—the guts of my office."

Twenty-eight directors and regional directors had been dropped one salary grade in 1969.

"Nowhere else, including the treasury board, has there been such a wholesale downgrading," Mr. Henderson said.

After he had complained to Treasury Board President C. M. Drury, who has criticized Mr. Henderson's activities, a committee was set up to assess the salary structure of the staff. The committee confirmed the downgrading in a report a year ago.

The government had rejected repeated requests for explanations of the downgrading, the auditor-general said.

Mr. Stanfield promised unrelenting Conservative opposition to the bill when it comes to the Commons for second reading.

MUZZLE TRY DENIED BY DRURY

OTTAWA (CP) — C. M. Drury, president of the treasury board, denied today that there is any government attempt to muzzle Auditor-General Maxwell Henderson.

Drury, appearing before the Senate finance committee, said he hopes Mr. Henderson will continue untrammelled in his job as watchdog of the treasury on behalf of Parliament.

10,000 See Pope

SYDNEY, Australia (CP) — Pope Paul prayed with leading Protestant churchmen in Sydney's town hall tonight while outside a handful of militant Protestants paraded with protest placards. The Pope did not appear to notice them among the 10,000 who had gathered to watch his arrival.

Ky Visit Erupts

SAN FRANCISCO (Reuter) — Police battled with bands of youths in the exclusive Nob Hill area in a violent outburst Tuesday during street demonstrations against the current visit here by Vice-President Nguyen Cao Ky of South Vietnam.

TWO WOMEN INMATES of a South Vietnamese prison north of Saigon claimed today riot police beat and tear-gassed more than 100 women prisoners and threw lye or acid on the group. They claim they were among 416 political prisoners who were protesting conditions in the jail and that some were still detained although their sentences had expired.

Ottawa Drops Price Guides

Labor Support Lacking

Times News Services

OTTAWA—The federal Prices and Incomes Commission is abandoning its guidelines for price and salary increases at the end of this year but is to continue investigating inflationary factors in the next few months without firm criteria.

Dr. John Young, head of the commission, said Tuesday the policing body has terminated an agreement struck with business leaders in February of this year to limit price increases to less than corresponding cost increases, a move which put a severe squeeze on profits in private industry.

Young, after a day-long meeting with business leaders Tuesday, said the commission had asked the industrialists voluntarily to extend the agreement through the first six months of 1971.

SLACK IN ECONOMY

A declaration drafted by the commission and 50 top business leaders at the Tuesday meeting pointed out that business conditions are uncertain, there is slack in the economy and government is moving toward stimulation of activity to counter feared record winter unemployment.

Under these conditions "and without wholehearted support and parallel action on the part of labor and government," the statement said, the continuation of formal restraints in 1971 "would no longer be warranted."

When the commission, created by Prime Minister Pierre Elliot Trudeau in the face of a growing inflation problem, conceived its six per cent guidelines in February of this year they were to be the basis of a three-party agreement between government, business and labor.

SALARIES UP

Business and government reached agreement and in most cases maintained it. Labor made no commitment and the commission, with no real powers, was only able to look on helplessly while boosts of 18, 20 and even 25 per cent in salary contracts were ratified.

Young said Tuesday he does not think abandonment of the

DEPUTY TO DOUGLAS SEEKS NDP LEADERSHIP

OTTAWA (CP) — David Lewis, 61-year-old deputy leader of the New Democratic Party, formally announced today his candidacy for his party's leadership at its April convention here.

Lewis told a news conference that he would win handily if the convention were held in the next few weeks.

But he would not be so foolhardy to take as granted an April victory.

The other announced candidates are Ed Broadbent, 34, MP for Oshawa-Whitby; John Harney, 39, former party secretary in Ontario; and James Laxer, 29, representing the left-wing Waffle group.

Put Mine Waste in Ground, Salmon Group Urges Utah

By DOUG MacRAE
Times Staff

PORT HARDY — Put it back, says the Pacific Salmon Society.

The society was one of four objectors heard today at a pollution control board hearing here into an application on behalf of a multi-million dollar copper-molybdenum mining corporation.

The U.S.-based Utah Construction and Mining Company wants to dump 9.3 million gallons of solid mine wastes daily into Rupert Inlet.

Salmon Society representative Patrick Moore, in a brief prepared for the hearing, suggested stockpiling the waste from the strip mining operation, then replacing it in stages as the mining progresses.

Later today, pollution control director William Venables denied he had said Utah Construction and Mining Co. had an automatic go-ahead for its $74 million mine complex here.

Venables was quoted by the Vancouver Province this morning as saying the Utah project would go ahead as planned despite today's hearing into the pollution aspect of the mine-mill complex.

"Until I put my signature on the necessary documents, nothing here is decided . . . I have no authority to determine whether or not this mine will function," said Venables.

The company said its discharge would contain mine tailings and residual quantities of cyanide, zinc, and reagents normally associated with mining and milling operations. Utah claims studies sponsored by the company show that these reagents will not be toxic to fish or other marine life.

The mine-mill project, at a site 10 miles south of here, is well along in construction, with initial deliveries to a Japanese buyer scheduled for early 1972. Over a 25-year period the company will mine and concentrate more than 300,000,000 tons of molybdenum and copper.

Grandmother Battles Mine Giant In Bid to Halt Sea Pollution

Times Staff

PORT HARDY — Mrs. Elaine Price is a young grandmother from Duncan who stood up today to a giant mining corporation on the matter of environment.

She'd rather an expert speak instead but she is one of only four allowed to be heard in opposition to the Utah dumping application and she's ready to give it her best.

"I sincerely hope the director (William Venables, the province's director of pollution control) is not mocking the ordinary citizen who is deeply concerned about the environment in British Columbia," she says in her four-page brief.

"But the set-up of this hearing would certainly lead one to doubt the bona fides of the whole procedure."

Venables had earlier ruled he would only hear the four objectors who confirmed their stand by a second letter after the pollution control branch received close to 150 objections to granting the mine dumping permit earlier this year.

Mrs. Price is a member of the Cowichan-Malahat branch of SPEC and that organization helped her prepare as best she could for today's presentation.

Kurt Horn, president of the SPEC branch, said today Mrs. Price worried so much about appearing at the hearing she became physically ill.

TORONTO (CP) — George Christian Hanna, 34, once known as the man without a country, was given a suspended sentence and ordered held in custody pending a deportation hearing when he was found guilty Tuesday of obtaining food and drink by fraud.

Munro Attacks Man-Made Murk

WINNIPEG (CP) — Health service leaders must extend preventive medicine practices from the bedside into the physical and social environment, including areas of low-cost housing, automobile safety, and air and water pollution controls, Health Minister John Munro said today.

"It is downright inefficient to be constantly treating people for respiratory ailments and filing problems if the air a patient breathes outside doctors' offices, hospitals, clinics, is capable of undoing all the treatment received within," Munro told delegates to the third annual Manitoba Health Conference.

"It is an insult to the practice of medicine if the water we ingest in so many ways contains pollutants with the power to out-fight or outlast our strongest medicines."

MAN-MADE MARK

The federal minister told about 2,000 delegates that as people dedicated to the pursuit of human health, "health professionals cannot allow the menace of man-made murk to go on festering in our atmosphere and in our rivers and lakes."

He said "every conceivable pressure" must be brought to bear "to halt the polluters in their tracks now."

Munroe said Canada's worst health problems, both mental and physical, are found in the poverty pockets.

SENSITIVE

He told the health professionals they must become more sensitive to the phenomenon of drug abuse among young people.

"The foremost need is information—objective, factual, non-moralistic information—that will reach experimenting youth and be believed by them."

He told a news conference the federal government will be introducing a drug program in a few months that will make available to drug abusers medical facilities, analytical services and information and education services.

Basques Kidnap Consul

Times News Services

SAN SEBASTIAN, Spain — Basque terrorists, following Quebec's FLQ terrorist tactics, have kidnapped an honoary West German consul here and are holding him hostage for 15 Basque nationals awaiting trial.

Eugene Beihl, 59, was kidnapped from his home. Witnesses said Beihl, who represents several German industrial firms in Spain, drove into his garage Tuesday night, then drove out again with several men in his car.

The 15 defendents are charged with banditry and terrorism and 12 are expected to be linked to the terrorist group when the trial starts Thursday.

There has been no word from the consul.

$1 BUYS 100 CUPS OF MILK

Children who grow up without enough food can suffer brain damage, underdeveloped bodies and a host of other disorders.

Most of us do not know what real hunger means but, to millions of Asians, it is as familiar as sunlight and darkness, and just as recurrent.

The dollar you send to the children of Asia fund buys 100 cups of milk. Milk, of course, is a high-protein food. Protein shortages have become the world's greatest food problem.

The Unitarian Service Committee feeds and houses abandoned babies in Mokpo, Korea. Your donation to help their work will not eliminate hunger, but they will end somebody's hunger.

United Nations consultants say Korea has passed the stage of needing material relief and has entered an era of rehabilitation and economic development.

In 1969, the country's rate of economic growth was 12 per cent. But USC executive director Dr. Lotta Hitschmanova says the government continues to emphasize economic progress rather than solutions to social problems.

Less than three per cent of the government's budget pays for health and welfare programs, while 35 per cent goes to defence.

This adds up to a continuing demand for basic necessities. USC programs in Korea meet part of this demand.

U.S. Toughens Bombing Stand

By JOHN HIGHTOWER

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Nixon administration has expanded its policy on air attacks against North Vietnam in what appears to be a deliberate strategy of increasing pressure on Hanoi while continuing U.S. troop withdrawals.

Officials report a toughening attitude by administration leaders toward North Vietnam during the past months. The reasons appear to include frustration over lack of progress in the Paris peace talks, the prisoner-of-war issue, and a determination to prevent Hanoi from taking advantage of declining American troop strength in Southeast Asia.

The United States ended bombing of North Vietnam Oct. 31, 1968, and until earlier this year air strikes against the North were explained as retaliation for attacks on U.S. reconnaissance planes.

In recent months, however, defence department spokesmen have expanded the reasons to include "protective reaction" against North Vietnamese rocket batteries firing at planes over neighboring Laos, interdiction of supplies moving down to South Vietnam, Cambodia or Laos and retaliation for terror shellings of South Vietnamese cities.

CONFIRM POLICY

Furthermore, officials privately confirm the policy of expanding retaliatory strikes when possible to include other targets in the general area to destroy supply buildups.

Officials have also made clear that American combat planes flying protection for bombers operating against Communist positions in Laos can fire at missile bases in North Vietnam when they detect Communist radar locking on the bomber.

Neither President Nixon nor his spokesmen have pulled all these reasons together into any formal new policy statement on bombing the North.

And no responsible informant in the administration suggests that Nixon has any intention of resuming the bombings. President Lyndon B. Johnson finally brought to an end after bitter and sometimes violent public controversy.

Remand Shortened For Dr. Stewart

PORT ALBERNI (CP) — A court date of Dec. 18 was set Tuesday for Dr. Glen Stewart, 43, charged with possession of a stolen inflatable boat and with failing to appear in court while free on bail.

Stewart had been remanded Monday for 30 days for psychiatric examination after being remanded initially until Dec. 16.

The latest change in remand dates followed objections by defence lawyer Ron McIsaac of Nanaimo that the longer remand would delay disposition of the charges.

Stewart was to be taken today to Riverview Mental Hospital in Coquitlam, near Vancouver, for examination.

He had been held in this Vancouver Island community since Monday after being returned with a female companion from San Francisco, where the two were held by immigration officials.

While awaiting a hearing at San Francisco to determine whether he was in the United States lawfully, Stewart was questioned about the shooting of Gordon Kralt, 23, caretaker at a Bible camp four miles south of Bamfield.

Stewart had been linked to the area by his 35-foot yacht Gypsy which sank off the mouth of the Columbia River in Oregon early in November. Kralt, believed to be dead three weeks, was found on Nov. 22.

Stewart was also questioned by RCMP about the disappearance of a Smithers nurse, Mrs. Sheila Haupt, and her three-year-old daughter some 10 months ago. Stewart had been a surgeon at the Smithers hospital.

Sterilization At Hospital Wide Open

Royal Jubilee Hospital has established more liberal standards covering sterilization operations for men and women.

Anyone at least 19 years old, of sound mind and known long enough by his or her physician for the doctor to be satisfied such an operation is in the patient's best interests, now qualifies as far as the hospital is concerned.

Previous applications for vasectomies (the simple sterilization operation for men) or tubal ligations (the more complicated operation for women) were reviewed by a five-man hospital committee.

The more liberal stand on vasectomies has been in effect for some time, Dr. A. J. Pickles, the hospital's executive director, said Tuesday.

"But now we've abolished the mythical difference between the sexes on these standards."

Dr. Pickles said sterilization is now a matter between patient and doctor.

NOVEMBER WINDIEST SINCE 1948

The past month was the windiest November since 1948, according to records kept by the Regional climate data centre at Gonzales Observatory.

Average wind speed for the month was 13.6 miles per hour, as compared with 16.9 m.p.h. in 1948. Gale force winds were recorded on four days, with the highest gust from the west southwest at 62 m.p.h. on Nov. 20.

Two new daily minimum temperature records were also set. On Nov. 22 the temperature dropped to 26, as compared with 30.8 in 1931. On Nov. 23 the low was 30.9, the previous record being 32.8 in 1906.

Brothers Plead Not Guilty

Prosecutor Robert Hutchison said the crown intends to show a 15-year-old girl involved in the alleged May 28 incident was forcibly taken to the place where it occurred, an access road off Highland Road in the Thetis Lake area.

The girl testified she was pulled into the youths' car, and was later threatened with a gun and a knife. She said she struggled and was near hysteria.

The two accused drank some beer and smoked two marijuana cigarettes while at the site of the alleged offence, the girl said, but she had neither.

When she was taken home, she managed to note the licence plate number of the car, she said.

Sidney Jury Blames Driver

A sidney coroner's jury ruled Tuesday night the driver of a car involved in a two-car crash at Mills Road and Littlewood was responsible for the death of his passenger.

Charles Scott, 47, of 2355 Belmont Ave., entered the intersection while it was unsafe, the jury ruled, and passenger Emil Olson, 66, of 1045 Rockland, died of multiple injuries 10 hours later while being transferred from Rest Haven Hospital to Royal Jubilee Hospital.

Sidney coroner D. G. Ashby presided.

Another Sidney inquest into the traffic death of Mrs. Lillian Frates, 60, of 258 Maynard, will continue Dec. 8 at 8 p.m. at the municipal building. Mrs. Frates died in a two-car crash at Fifth and Henry Sept. 15.

guidelines will result in major price increases at the beginning of the year — that there is no indication business has been holding its breath until January to hike prices suddenly.

The statement issued Tuesday said business representatives still are concerned about price and cost increases, and the commission should continue its research and public education work. The commission now has about 20 price and wage reviews under way.

The statement added that the commission should, if possible, "develop policy suggestions aimed at avoiding a repetition of recent national experience with inflation."

The commission's mandate continues for another year, Young pointed out, and it its new role as a research organ, it will undertake fact-finding studies of the circumstances and implications of individual pay settlements and make reports to government and the public.

The work, however, will be more complicated and difficult than in the past because of the lack of firm criteria on which to base their analyses.

GET FACTS

Young indicated soaring costs in the construction industry will be one of the commission's first subjects to tackle.

"The commission will continue to examine in co-operation with employers, unions, governments and clients the underlying reasons for these (construction) cost increases and the measures that can be taken by all concerned to bring about a moderation in them."

Utah Stays With Inlet Dump View

Times Staff

PORT HARDY — Utah Construction and Mining Co. said today studies of Rupert Inlet have confirmed the company's view that proposed marine disposal of tailings from its copper mine is "a safe and acceptable from an environmental standpoint."

In a brief filed with the B.C. Pollution Control Branch at a hearing here, the company noted that its first feasibility studies concerning mine tailing disposal were begun in early 1968.

"The work included surveys to determine the depth of Rupert Inlet, studies of the settling characteristics of the tailings . . . and inspections of several mining operations disposing of tailings in a similar manner.

"On the basis of these data, it was concluded that marine disposal of tailings was an acceptable method from an environmental standpoint, and indeed by far the preferable method at this location."

Utah began exploratory drilling at the site in 1966. Plans call for milling operations to begin next year, with the first shipment of concentrate set for early 1972. The mine will employ 500 persons.

. . . GRANDMOTHER BATTLES

"This is the sad part," said Horn of Venables' ruling.

"Why make it so you frighten people off who have valid complaints but are without the technical expertise?

"Do you have to know the sex life of a crab to be concerned about the future of crabbing in your area?"

So Mrs. Price is reluctant but determined.

"Am I expected to be a super-expert cross-examiner and deal effectively with Utah's technical advisers when I have neither the training to cross-examine nor the expertise to deal with the Utah specialist?" she asked Tuesday.

She was the only woman among about 40 men who struggled through the mud as mine officials took everyone on a tour of the site.

Some of her comments along the way:

"The issue of pollution is a moral one and I don't believe that anyone, for profit or any other motive, has the option of contaminating our oceans.

"General good intentions are not enough today. We must have honest ecological facts.

"I am concerned that the effluent from Utah (an estimated 9.3 million gallons daily) will disturb this delicate balance of nature. Remember, it took 25 years for the law to recognize the hazards of DDT."

KEY WITNESS in the court martial of William Calley (right) in the shooting deaths of old men, women and children in My Lai is Robert Maples (left), the first person to testify he saw Calley shoot the victims. He continues his testimony today. (AP Wirephoto.)

Witness Says Calley Did Kill Peasants

By WILLIAM GREIDER

FT. BENNING, Ga. (WP) —Two years ago in Vietnam, Robert E. Maples recalls, he refused to turn his machine-gun on some hapless people lined up in a ditch.

BLOODY ASSAULT

Now, Maples is a 22-year-old civilian from Freehold, N.J., a tall and slender black man with the broad shoulders of a warehouseman. Then he was specialist-fourth-class Maples, a machinegunner in Company C's first platoon when Calley led the bloody assault on that South Vietnamese village.

Tuesday, biting his lip nervously, Maples became the first witness in the court martial of Lt. Calley to testify that he saw Calley shoot unresisting civilians at My Lai. Maples could not elaborate on the number of bodies, but the 27-year-old lieutenant is charged with the murder of 102 people, including 70 or so at the irrigation ditch east of My Lai where Maples saw the encounter.

BIG DITCH

"We just moved through the village and finally we came to an opening, a clearing on the other side of the village and this was where this big ditch was," Maples remembered.

He said he and two assistants saw Lt. Calley there with Paul Meadlo, a rifleman from the platoon, and a large group of Vietnamese civilians. Harry Stanely, who carried ammunition for the machine-gun, was summoned by Calley to interpret for him, the witness said.

"After Stanley came back, Lt. Calley herded the rest of the people down into the hole," Maples recalled. "Him and Meadlo was firing into the hole and Meadlo was crying . . . I don't know how many there was . . . it was women, babies, a couple of old men."

HE WAS CRYING

How long did they fire? "I don't remember." Where were the rifles pointed? "Into the hole." What type of fire was it, automatic or single shot? "I don't know." How could he tell Meadlo was crying?" "I saw him."

The army prosecutor, Capt. Aubrey M. Daniel, asked Maples if he had any conversation with Lt. Calley at the ditch.

"All I can remember," Maples said, "is him asking for me to use my machine-gun."

"What was your response?" Daniel asked.

"I refused," he said.

"Were any of the people at the ditch armed? Did you see any who offered resistance?" Maples answered no to both questions.

The six army officers who are Lt. Calley's jury have heard seven days of prosecution witnesses so far, none anywhere near so damaging to Calley as the freight handler from New Jersey. Other veterans from the first platoon will follow with their eyewitness accounts of what Calley did or told them to do.

STACKS OF BODIES

With his first 21 witnesses, called over the past two weeks, the prosecutor laboriously laid the foundation for the government's murder charges — the stacks of nameless Vietnamese peasants who are the corpus delicti in this case.

Infantrymen from other platoons and helicopter crewmen who flew air cover for the My Lai assault told of the carnage they saw at the irrigation ditch and other My Lai locations charged to Calley, but none of them saw him shoot anyone.

Oak Bay Firemen Seek Pay Parity With Police

Oak Bay's personnel committee and the municipality's fire department began negotiations Tuesday on the firefighters' request for wage parity with Oak Bay policemen.

The firemen, who now receive five per cent less than the policemen, are asking for at least redress for a two per cent bonus with the police started receiving in July.

The bonus was the most recent in a series of developments that started when Saanich awarded its police department a higher wage rate than any of the others in the Greater Victoria area.

FRINGE BENEFITS

Personnel committee chairman Ald. Ian Horne says council will consider the matter without recommendation from his committee because information is not yet available on such items as comparable fringe benefits.

The question of the two per cent bonus will be settled before the end of the year. At that time the firefighters' contract expires and it is expected they will fight for parity during negotiations.

Oak Bay did not give the bonus to its police force until all the other Greater Victoria municipalities had implemented it.

SOAKING COSTS

Horne said the police increase and the suggested firemen's increase had been forced upon Oak Bay by the "unilateral decision by another municipality."

Although Saanich's action might have been justified in that municipality's particular case, he doesn't like Oak Bay's hand being forced.

"We do not want to be put in a similar position in the future."

Horne said the biggest problem with the suggested two per cent bonus for firemen, retroactive to July 1, was that the increase had not been included in the budget and soaring welfare costs had knocked the municipality's budget off base.

'Economic Problems Come First'

ANTIGONISH, N.S. (CP) — Creditiste Leader Real Caouette said Tuesday it is necessary to cure Canada's economic problems "before we start to worry about such things as constitutional language problems."

Speaking to a gathering at St. Francis Xavier University, Mr. Caouette asked: "Why if it is possible for the federal government to provide interest-free loans to underdeveloped nations, could it not also provide the same type of loans for developing industry in Canada?"

★ ★ ★

He said a step in the right direction would be to have a central Bank of Canada in Ottawa provide the funds necessary for provincial and municipal governments and industries, "on an interest-free basis."

The Creditiste leader, on a tour of the Maritime provinces, acknowledged the hopes of laying foundations of the party in Canada's eastern provinces.

He pointed to the party's operations in Alberta and British Columbia and said "the Creditiste party does have something to offer Canadians."

OAK BAY

JOHN EAMER-GOULT FOR ALDERMAN

Recreation must be the concern of all our citizens. Blueberry Hill in the southern part of Oak Bay near Central and Newport Avenues is the last large remaining area of natural beauty in that part of the Municipality. If it were sold for private development it could not be replaced.

We must exert every effort to purchase this land as a public park for the enjoyment of all our citizens present and future.

Council has recognized the need for a recreation centre to serve the needs of our residents of all ages. We must continue to press for its early completion.

Many of our citizens are over 65 years of age. Oak Bay has plans to provide a day activity centre for them. It will be the last of the four Greater Victoria municipalities to do so. Let us get on with the job.

For Emergency Use Only

IT WAS A MEASURE OF THE reservations with which some members of Parliament viewed the public order bill that the Commons took a month to pass a measure which might have required only a few days. The legislation, when it is approved by the Senate, will confer powers on the police which fall somewhat short of the emergency powers contained in the War Measures Act, but certainly far exceed any previous peacetime concessions.

Easy access to legal aid for prisoners is possible, and the application of the bill will be terminated, unless Parliament extends it, April 30. But bail is restricted; persons may be held more than 24 hours without a charge; search and seizure without a warrant are made easy.

These are strange features for Canadian law in peacetime. It is stranger still that so many people in Canada have uncritically accepted as necessary a type of law which they would probably condemn if they heard of it being applied in some other country. The threat of the FLQ as a political terrorist force is still felt by many Canadians, even though the magnitude of the emergency has never been fully clarified by the government.

There is already talk of making the law permanent, rather than merely a short-term expedient. This should be strongly resisted. Canada, despite some remarks which have come out of Quebec, is not a land in which arbitrary police powers have become a routine national necessity. It was a test of the government's strength to put the bill through Parliament. But a greater test of its integrity will come when the act, if it passes the Senate, is placed on the statute books.

Canadians should watch its application by the authorities. It is a measure to cover extreme emergencies; we should ensure that it is used only on such occasions. They should be rare events. For all normal purposes the ordinary law of the country, with its safeguards for the individual, is sufficient to preserve public safety and security. In the public order bill we are dealing with very powerful medicine. It should be prescribed with care only after a very thorough analysis.

Charity Towards an End

A CHARITABLE PROJECT SUPported by donated funds should not be self-perpetuating. It should have a definable objective and a foreseeable end. It is one of the heartening aspects of the Unitarian Service Committee program of aid to Asian countries that it wins full marks on both counts. Both in India and in Korea, where much of the USC effort is expended, the day is in sight when the government will largely take over the aid programs which have been financed by the contributions of Canadians, and permit the USC to seek out other areas of need.

The aid projects, which are master-minded by the indefatigable executive director of the USC, Dr. Lotta Hitschmanova, are only partly of an emergency nature — that is, the provision of food for survival. Most of the effort is directed toward rehabilitation: hospitals to restore young bodies, schools for the education of children, provision of tools or equipment or training for adults so that they may become self-supporting. And since the population explosion can defeat efforts to better the living conditions of people at the subsistence level, family planning is also an important part of the USC services.

This assistance of all kinds is by preference given through existing institutions and through co-operation with governmental services in the various countries. And when a project has proved viable and worthwhile, the government can then take it over entirely as a recognized part of the social pattern of the land.

It is because of this very practical and logical approach to foreign aid that the Victoria Daily Times is happy to sponsor, for the eighteenth year, the annual fund campaign of the Unitarian Service Committee. Non-denominational, carefully supervised, and earning the commendation of people and their governments in Canada and abroad, the USC program is well worthy of support. Through it some of the good living of Canada can be shared with far less fortunate folk in other lands. Whether for a small contribution or a large one, we recommend the USC Children of Asia Fund.

Into Murky Waters

ONLY FOUR PERSONS WILL be allowed to lodge official protests against the proposed dumping of millions of tons of mine wastes into Rupert Inlet, at the northern tip of Vancouver Island. This limitation, and the fact that Mr. William Venables, the pollution control director, is holding the inquiry in Port Hardy, an almost inaccessible northern community, gives the whole proceedings a farcical touch.

Almost unnoticed is the fact that the $74-million mining complex of Utah Construction and Mining Company is already near completion. It is far too late for the provincial government or its pollution control board to call a halt to the project. The likelihood of any public protests having significant effect is therefore negligible before the inquiry even starts.

— The vast strip-mining project must pile its wastes into a mountain on land, or pour them into the inlet at a rate of 9.3 million gallons a day. Conservationists predict the ruination of the inlet and, over a longer term, grave pollution of Quatsino Sound. The mining site itself, unless provincial laws regarding restoration of strip mining sites are rigidly enforced, will produce a lasting scar on land only a short distance from the projected park at Cape Scott. It will be recalled that the provincial government traded $10 millions worth of timber in Strathcona Park for several parcels of land in the proposed parkland area, estimated to be worth $300,000.

Meanwhile, the public wonders what permanent return it will receive from the mining operation to recompense it for the ecological damage that is in prospect. Perhaps the inquiry which opens today at Port Hardy will make this clear. Perhaps.

FROM WASHINGTON

Breaking the Silence of Cabinet Dissent

By JAMES RESTON

AMONG the minor tragedies in Washington in the last generation has been the triumph of good manners over honest convictions. When presidents and their cabinet members and White House staffers have differed since the last world war, they have tended to conceal their differences from the public and even from one another, thus creating an atmosphere of false unity, which was bad for everybody concerned. Seldom in these last 25 years has anybody quit or been fired openly on principle. Many have "retired for personal reasons." Many more have slipped away with their "dear Walter" letters expressing the eternal gratitude of the president for their faithful service to the great republic. It was all very polite, but also very phony.

Reston

President Nixon and Secretary of the Interior Hickel have done better, not much but some. They have parted with a bang. Hickel differed with the president's polarizing politics. He insisted on being fired personally by the president, and Nixon accommodated him, which is fair enough.

It is hard to define where a cabinet member's convictions should take precedence over his loyalties to the president, and harder still to say when he is justified in taking his differences with the president to the public, but it is fairly easy to explain the problem.

No Shared Leadership

Cabinet members in the United States are the personal choices and even creations of the president. Outside of men such as Secretary of Defence Laird, they do not represent powerful political constituencies in the nation, and there is actually no "cabinet" in the British sense of a group of men sharing collective leadership and assuming collective responsibility for the major actions of the nation.

Accordingly, American cabinet members have come to be regarded merely as advisors and even servants of the president, who has the power and even the right to determine policy, even if all of them disagree with him. This is the way it has been ever since the days of Lincoln, who once dramatized the point by saying: Eight noes against my aye—the ayes have it.

Still, this creates problems. Cabinet members like Hickel or George Romney come from states where they were governors with the power of executive decision. They are introduced on television by the president as men of individual judgment, and then they usually disappear into their vast executive departments in Washington, with little sense of common responsibility for the major decisions of the government, and actually with remarkably little personal contact with the president.

Most of them adjust to this. They get lost in their departmental responsibilities, console themselves with the trappings of their offices, and accept the popular cabinet and White House staff cliche: "I have only one client—the president."

It is an understandable attitude. They recognize that the president is both chief executive of the nation and leader of a political party, and that often these two jobs lead to fundamental contradictions. They sympathize with his struggles to cut back the nation's overseas commitments without stumbling into isolation; to fight inflation without slipping into an economic depression; to restore civil order without destroying civil liberties—so usually they swallow their doubts and remain silent, especially if the president does not really encourage dissent, and most of them don't while pretending that they do.

Great Dangers

There are, however, great dangers in this system. A cabinet post is not a marriage. The present system comforts the president but frustrates the boldest and often the most creative members of his cabinet and White House staff. It often denies the president the hard but essential challenge of thoughtful minds, and, even though he may not intend it, intimidates his colleagues into silence or provokes them into public protest.

At least in Hickel's case, the truth comes out, and the republic will probably survive his departure, for after all he was dissenting mainly against the president's political tactics. It is much more serious, however, when men like John Gardner and Robert McNamara differ, as they did with President Johnson, on fundamental questions of policy, including the tactics of peace and war, but still stay on quietly out of loyalty and out of their distaste for making a public fuss.

When Dissent Stifled

It would be hard, however, to overestimate the damage done by presidents who do not encourage plain and honest dissent within the official family, and by loyal and sensitive cabinet members and White House staffers who do not speak their minds, but stay on out of sympathy, courtesy, fear or ambition.

Did the cabinet agree with Nixon's and Agnew's campaign in the last election? Did they agree about the invasion of Cambodia or the recent bombing and rescue raids on North Vietnam? The evidence is that most of them were not consulted, and that those of them who disagreed have not made their views known to the President, even now.

So maybe Hickel's dissent and the president's decision to bounce him are better than the polite conspiracy of silence that has tended to prevail in the last quarter of the century in Washington. At least it is clear and candid. Hickel didn't slam the door as he went out. He slipped out the back gate, but he made his point and so did the president: private dissent is distasteful in this administration, and public dissent by a cabinet member is unforgivable.

Looking Back

From the Times of Dec. 2, 1910:

Quatsino is to have a town hall. Not being incorporated it was found impossible to levy for the purpose of raising funds, but instead subscriptions were sought, and it did not take long to raise the necessary money. The lumber has been purchased and is on the ground and the residents are putting up the building themselves . . . it will prove very useful for meetings, concerts and public gatherings.

FROM LONDON

The Tories May Have to Freeze Wages

By ANTHONY LEWIS

IT IS JUST two weeks since the brave launching of Edward Heath's experiment in less government and more incentive for the middle classes to jolt Britain out of its economic rut. Alas for the experiment, with all its novelty and interest abroad, events already seem to be passing it by. Tax cuts and reductions in welfare spending suddenly look insignificant in comparison to the real economic issue confronting Britain. That issue is inflation.

In the industrial societies on both sides of the Atlantic, apparently intractable inflation threatens economic and political stability. But the speed with which that threat is forcing a new Conservative British Government to reexamine its premises is noteworthy and may carry an international message.

More than was generally recognized, Prime Minister Heath took office as a true believer in laissez-faire economics. His ideology included resolute opposition to any form of direct government intervention on wages and prices. Labor's Prices and Incomes Board, with its power to scrutinize and delay proposed increases, had to be — and was — abolished.

Instead, the Heath Government planned to fight inflation by encouraging the market forces of resistance. Industry was exhorted to stand fast against excessive wage demands. And Heath's ministers promised to resist big wage claims in the public sector, which is a large slice of the British economy when nationalized industry and local government are included.

In the last two weeks, that strategy has collapsed.

Under pressure from the miners' union the nationalized coal executive made a record offer of 12 per cent up on basic wage rates. Union leaders happily accepted, but the rank and file — not satisfied — are beginning wildcat strikes that seem likely to close all the pits down for the first time since 1926.

Disastrous Settlement

Last week a strike of garbage collectors and other municipal workers all over the country was settled on terms that the Government considered disastrous. An industrial arbitrator awarded them 15 per cent, virtually all they had demanded.

Worse yet, from the viewpoint of the economic analysts, was the basis of the award. The arbitrator, Sir Jack Scamp, a highly regarded figure, stated frankly that the figure he picked was inflationary. But so were all recent wage rises, he said, and "given the pace of inflation in the country there is no chance that it can be arrested by a somewhat smaller pay increase" in this case.

That view was fatal to the whole Heath approach. For if inflation cannot be resisted by drawing the line at this or that wage claim, then everyone is going to rush to the trough for his share. Officials make no secret of their fear that the rush is on. Britain is already having its worst year for strikes since 1926, and management resistance is understandably weakening. The prospect is a rise of 12 or 15 per cent in the annual wage bill of a country whose productivity is going up only 2 per cent a year.

The Prime Minister will have to do something. That is what everyone says. But what?

Threat to Tory Hopes

Orthodoxy would suggest another squeeze, a screwing down of the money supply. But the sure result of that would be a rise in unemployment and a hard blow at business expansion— the very opposite of the effect the Tories wanted to have with their tax cuts.

The only apparent alternative is that difficult, much-criticized device that Heath and his colleagues have so firmly foresworn: incomes policy. More and more analysts are predicting that within months, after some more squeezing, the Conservative Government will have to swallow its principles and try another direct attempt to freeze or limit wages.

Such a course would have inescapable implications outside Britain. The Scandinavian countries and Ireland have already had to resort to wage control in the current international inflation, but for a Tory British Government to do so would be much more influential.

And that is where the United States and President Nixon come in. After the election, with the Democrats obviously benefiting from unemployment and stagnation, the President will surely move to a more expansionary policy. But all the pain of the last year has not really stopped inflation, and with fuller employment it is likely to get worse.

If Heath ever comes to accept some form of wage restraint as a necessity, can Nixon be far behind?

Letters

Too Expensive

On November 24, on Page 11, your newspaper published a short item to the effect that about half of the 500 employees of Utah Mining and Construction Co. have signed a petition protesting the exclusion of the Society of Pollution and Environmental Control from a Pollution Control Board hearing, which will take place this week. No explanation has been offered to the public as to why the board will not permit this brief.

The action taken by the employees of Utah Mining is highly praiseworthy and commendable, and deserves a vote of sincere thanks and appreciation from all citizens of B.C. who are concerned about the ever increasing problems of pollution.

It is difficult to understand why the Provincial Government even considered the proposal of Utah Mining to dump vast daily quantities of effluent in Rupert Inlet. Industry at this price is too expensive both morally and financially. —(Mrs.) Gladys A. Morton, 1005 Pakington.

Free Show?

In the issue of the Victoria Daily Times of Thursday, November 26, there was a detailed account by Bob Hunter of The Sun of "the therapy that nobody understands." It was prefixed "Essondale."

Why has this electro-convulsive therapy become a free show for non-medical people? Why are the newspapers so sadistic that they allocate columns for a detailed account of this form of treatment? As the daughter of a mother who underwent this treatment in a Scottish hospital — and benefited from it — I beg to protest against such cruel publicity. Is it fair, or even decent, to subject an unconscious patient, a fellow human being, to the stares of the uninitiated?

I am disgusted that the medical staff of the hospital permitted it.—"J. MacP."

Unenlightened

Recently the Minister of Welfare created a storm when he suggested that able bodied people on welfare should be put to work to pay for their subsistence.

It is common knowledge that by federal law anyone in need can collect and most of us will, I'm sure, agree that there are many in need who deserve this help.

However, let us stop and think. Could not any one of us be in need if we had not been taught to work hard, or do without, to save a little for our old age?

Perhaps the older generation really was and is "unenlightened". My father worked on roads in the summer to earn the existing relief of $6.00 per month, received during the 40-degree-below winter period. Of course they were too dumb in those days to refuse to work.

Today, due to inflation and taxes caused by great numbers getting something for nothing produced, savings are disappearing from those who were hard workers and thrifty, saving during harder times than any under the age of 35 have seen in this country. They are perturbed and with good reason.

I have heard many thrifty people of my age group 45 to 50, complain about working so hard to support others who have time to enjoy the beaches and travel, but no one seems to have an answer.—Robert White, 448 Victoria.

Treatment of Mental Illness 'As Modern as Mace'

By BOB HUNTER
The Sun

There is no question that things have improved so far as treatment of the mentally ill is concerned. The techniques now used are anything but medieval. They are, in fact, as modern as Mace.

Yet the history of mental illness is such a horror story that to say merely that things have improved is not necessarily to say very much. They could scarcely have got worse.

What confuses many people is this:

While the techniques have been modernized, the basic concept of asylums is medieval.

Health Minister Ralph Loffmark says the philosophy of Riverview Hospital has to involve consideration of the whole individual in the context of his total environment." That sounds cool and right on and all that.

In the process of placing a person in Riverview, one

Last of Series

Certainly the walls have begun to crumble. There are now psychiatric services, mental health centres, assessment centres, a psychiatric hopsital at UBC, a handful of boarding homes and sheltered workshops, some acute care facilities in general hospitals, extended care and forensic services, a few special schools and, of course, your friendly neighborhood drug store.

But it is only a beginning.

Until such time as there are small residential and outpatient institutions scattered throughout the province, the philosophy of treatment "in the context of total environment" must remain a fantasy.

The total context approach demands that treatment be available locally, that the patient be able to remain in close contact with family and friends.

You aren't shipped off to the end of the province. Family support is rallied. Your employer and fellow employees are kept in touch.

But if it is your nervous system that breaks, your world crashes in silence.

As often as not, a cover story has to be arranged so you'll be able to go back on the job eventually. Your family is not brought into the treatment process at all.

At Scarborough in Ontario efforts have been made to bring whole families in for a weekend, to get them involved, and in effect to make them aware of the subtle and sometimes not so subtle ways in which their own attitudes and behavior figure in the patient's experience of breakdown.

But perhaps what is most critically needed is a reversal of the present approach, from treatment to prevention.

We have health officers who go around testing our water supplies and food and what-not. We may quibble about how effectively they do their job, but at least the idea of having guards posted to keep a sharp eye out for the approach of disease has gotten through. Our physical health is watched over.

Our mental health? Well, there are no district mental health officers whose job it is to guard aginst epidemics of paranoia or mass psychosis. (If there were, certain politicians would have to be quarantined, since they spread these diseases like plague.)

Finally, from quantitative "solutions"—the more or less blanket use of drugs and drastic mechanical therapies — there has to be a shift toward empathetic treatment.

The famous U.S. psychologist, Dr. Carl Rogers, worked out what he called a scale of "accurate empathy" wherein he attempted to measure the effects of "warmth" and "genuineness" in treatment.

As these two factors increased, so did the rate of recovery. The less warmth and genuineness the patient experienced in his relations with those who were trying to treat him, the less his chances of true recovery.

In a systemized setting, an institution, an asylum, "accurate" — if it manifests itself at all — manifests itself despite the system, not because of it.

Trudeau's Bent For Gaullism

By DOUGLAS FISHER

Few MPs have the experience and education of young John Roberts (Lib., York-Simcoe). He's an ex-lecturer in political science, a former foreign service official and an ex-assistant to a federal minister (Maurice Sauve).

Recently I had four days in his company during a speaking tour in the U.S. I synopsize the analysis I got from him on several, interrelated developments in federal politics: The Gaullist bent of Mr. Trudeau; the restructuring of cabinet organization and the prime minister's office to facilitate the process of policy review and administration; the partial eclipse of the House of Commons through new rules and the diverting of work and contention to its committees; the widening breach between MPs of the government caucus and both the government leadership and the party membership; and the new party process, implicit in the policy conference, which gives a quick feedback of opinion on issues and a unique kind of participation by the general membership with the party leader and a centralized party organization.

Like many of us, Mr. Roberts has noted Mr. Trudeau's penchant for declaring that the people can throw him out at the next election if they don't like the way he runs the government. Of course, this has always been the possibility at any election.

But the Gaullist emphasis is that a leader gets a mandate from the people as a whole; it is good for four years or more and interim tests of that mandate, including those advanced by the parliamentary opposition or through the input of all MPs as riding, region and provincial opinion leaders, is largely irrelevant to the grand mandate.

Use of Television

This embryonic Gaullism is complemented by the ease (and in Mr. Trudeau's case, the skill) with which national TV can be used to go to the people, creating an illusion of participation by the people with the country's leader.

Now the party's policy process — eventually to be geared to an electronic register of opinions — furthers another brand of particpation, real enough and very stimulating to those who share in it. But it also funnels into the leadership, not into Parliament.

It would seem to bypass the elected representatives; it seems to denigrate the worth of debate in the Commons; it cuts away the brokerage function (between interest groups and the government) so traditionally the role of our majority parties.

"Illusion of Participation"

The voting pattern projected by the vote of each individual delegate along a gradation of responses to each question, when totalled and profiled, becomes one mighty homogenizing broker.

There are enormous, relative advantages in these developments for the federal Liberals. First, they are in power and have the best leverage for getting the money contributions to finance the party process. They have the constant penetration of the leader by TV and triumphal, well-orchestrated tours. They have been the party of the centre for many years and preponderantly the party in power.

One consequence of the position and the reign has been a party unfettered by any "core" political ideology. It does not need to seek roominess. It has had it and has it.

Two Functions

It's not surprising that Mr. Roberts as an MP discerns what all this is capable of doing in further wrecking the role of an MP. The MP seems more and more to have two functions: On election night he completes the prime one when he is one in a total which determines who will be Prime Minister; in between such rare occasions he's a constituency chore-boy doing casework like a minor ombudsman.

The young MP from York-Simcoe wants all these trends reshaped to give the individual MP and the government MPs collectively a major part to play, largely by freeing them from absolute loyalty to the government's dictates in Parliament.

Fixed Period

He would do this by giving each Parliament a fixed life period. He would redefine the parliamentary conception and exercise of a vote of want of confidence. He would give committees a freer investigative and policy-forming mandate.

His suggestions are appealing. Do they go far enough? And if they do, how do we get them into effect?

We need a philosopher king as prime minister to achieve them. The incumbent is clearly taken with the party participation process much more than he is with Parliament and MPs.

Preaching Won't Solve Economic Mess

By ALFRED FRIENDLY
Washington Post

LONDON — Edward Heath and his Conservative administration are indulging in an experiment of government by exhortation. So far, it is not working.

The idea, it seems, is that by espousing and preaching noble ideals to the wayward British people they will be persuaded to set their feet on the paths of righteousness.

That is a dubious proposition in the best of circumstances, and the present circumstances are not the best, but the worst. For the problem being exhorted about is economic. It does not invite, nor is it amenable to treatment by exaltation of the soul.

If the issue is a belly-gripping one, like defence of hearth and home against a foreign aggressor, or a moral one like slavery, or a heart-wringing one like human pain or, in ancient days, a religious one, then the thrilling cries inspiring example of a Joan of Arc, a John Brown, a Florenee Nightingale or a St. Francis can, if the time and tone are right, produce results.

But the British problem to which the prime minister has been obliged to address himself is almost impossible to personalize. Its anatomy cannot be explained in rustic terms, period. Its remedies are technically difficult and it is solvable only by collective and not by individual action. Yet Heath is asking the British to solve it as individuals.

In the face of a price inflation probably running at about 10 per cent a year, and a wage inflation, still not completely reflected in prices, of 15 to 20 per cent, the government has simply called out: "Stop!"

Trade unions, Heath has said, should recognize that their excessive demands are hurtful to their countrymen and self-defeating as well, and should therefore abate them; employers should recognize that capitulating to them will price their goods out of world markets and bring Britain once again to disaster.

He is almost certainly correct on both points. But he is, equally, almost certainly mistaken if he thinks that kind of technician's reasoning can induce either workers or managers to cease their wicked ways and hit the sawdust trail.

The trouble is that inflationary expectations here have now become self-fulfilling. The worker, already experiencing higher prices and fearing still higher to come, moves to protect himself. The employer can hardly act on what he may well recognize as a distant threat of lower sales when the actuality in front of his face is total stoppage by a strike.

And through no fault of Heath, his government's trumpet gives an uncertain sound; it is in a poor position to enjoin private employers to accept strikes for the greater future good. That is because Britain's 1,400 local governments have just caved in to give 770,000 manual and clerical employees a wage increase of 15 to 18 per cent, and the national government now cannot avoid doing the same thing for another 250,000 public health workers it employs, for the rates are traditionally linked.

The dream of Heath and the Tory theoreticians may be the right one: with minimum government intervention and maximum opportunity and rewards for private enterprise, British enterprise will be unleashed and rise to achieve the economic equivalent of the cosmological steady-state, expanding universe. But despite the religious fervor of this preaching, they have not yet convinced anyone to act on their vision.

The intimations and invitations to the productive Utopia that have been offered so far are, moreover, pretty meagre in practical terms. Inescapably, government in a 20th-century industrial country must be heavily involved in the economy and its management, so that the few "withdrawals" Heath has found himself able to make are equivocal.

Heath and Co. have steadfastly rejected attacking inflation with any of the several varieties of a government-prescribed incomes policy that are possible because they appear incompatible with the "free society" that is their religion. Nor does the government dare impose the kind of torture-chamber credit squeeze that would be necessary to end inflation, because of its concomitant efforts of massive unemployment and the bankruptcies of important companies.

So, the government holds to the idea of trying to talk inflation down. But neither its words or minimal acts have yet set the glands in the British body economic to pumping out the adrenalin they are supposed to produce.

Except for the architects of the policy, no one thinks they will.

If You Can Stand the Cold

By ART STOTT

Some of my fishing friends, far more successful than I in taking salmon from the waters between Trial Island and Clover Point, have told me to forget about the late summer runs. The action, they say, is much better in late fall, winter and spring. Having caught my biennial salmon near the end of October—and nothing to speak about during the preceding months, I'm inclined to agree.

There are advantages to fishing from late October to early April. It's less congested out there. The grey days with vivid sunsets at dusk have a beauty of their own. The air is sharp.

There is one major drawback, also. It's cold, bone-chilling cold if you sit in a small open craft just beyond the kelp line and cast. Eventually you quit because your hands lose all feeling and you begin to shake.

★ ★ ★

At the end of last week, when a north breeze etched the surface in steel riffles, I quit because my arms seemed to end in stumps at my wrists. There was, moreover, no action. When the sun, hot-iron red, slipped behind the lower western Olympics, growing larger as the mountain line gave it perspective, I paddled home, thinking of an earlier day and the effectiveness of an old Indian who fished in November on the reach from Chain Island to Rescue Bay.

★ ★ ★

As a boy, I watched with Big Andy from the Smith house, at the east end of the Chinese cemetery, as he nosed his dugout around the Rescue Bay northern point. Seventy-five yards out he'd hook a fish, handline it in and turn homeward for his island. We fished the same area but without much success. The old Indian had his own particular magic in that spot.

He had, also, a system for keeping warm. In his dugout, almost between his feet, he placed a paint can, its bottom layered with sand and gravel. In it he built a small fire, keeping it going with bits of bark. No doubt the smoke impregnated his clothing and hair. It also chased away the chill.

Though Andy became friendly with the old man, we never discovered the secret of his success off Rescue Bay. He once even sold us a special lure he had devised. Heavy brass that didn't take much of a shine, it had the general form of a Diamond No. 7. Its action, at a slow troll, looked lazily effective. For us, it had one deficiency. It didn't catch fish. From the time I inherited it from Big Andy to the time, years later, when I snagged it on bottom close in to Trial and lost it with a good length of cutty-hunk line, it never produced a strike.

Whether or not the old man had a technique of his own for using the spoon I'll never know. For us, it was one of the most effective conservation instruments ever made.

★ ★ ★

Long after, we visited the old Indian's cabin on Chain, having missed him on his winter row to Rescue Bay. The dwelling, built of logs and lumber scavenged from the sea, had fallen into disuse. The door sagged on one hinge. Inside the smell of dank decay had taken over. In the small grass-covered hollow, where lilies laid a white carpet before encroaching briars choked them out, his shallow well was caving in, the water brown and brackish.

The day of the old Indian is long past. His fishing lore has gone with him. And perhaps, as some of us see it, the supply of salmon he tapped regularly in our sight has gone also.

That leaves his method of keeping warm on chill November days afloat.

It would be quite possible to take an old lard pail, cover the bottom of it with sand and gravel and even mount it above a sheet of asbestos in my canoe. Once housing a glowing bark fire it conceivably would heat the air below the gunnels and provide some small comfort to a winter fisherman.

It might also create a serious fire hazard in a craft built of less than quarter-inch thick cedar strips coated with a layer of dry varnish.

One thing is certain. If I broached the idea to the lady of the house it would generate enough heat in her to warm the entire district. She distrusts the Strait and small boats on it. She has a pathological fear of fire.

Now if I could just pipe into my canoe at the kelp line the temperature the mere suggestion would create in the lady . . .

Is there a department in extrasensory perception called extrasensory refraction which could handle the transmission job?

New Theory Explains the Reason Mountains Built From Ocean Floor

NEW YORK (NYT — Recent discoveries on the ocean floors are leading to a comprehensive theory on how the far-flung mountain ranges of the world were formed.

The theory explains why the ranges tend to fringe continents. It ancounts for the timetable of their formation from the crumpling of the Appalachians hundreds of millions of years ago to mountains now abuilding.

It offers an explanation for the fact that the world's highest mountains, the Himalayas, are built of material from the ocean floor.

The theory, known as "global plate tentonics," is part of a revolution in the earth sciences that many specialists in the field consider as important as the Darwinian revolution of a century ago. While geologists for centuries have studied the folding and upthrusting of mountains from the Alps to the Cascades, there has never been a generally accepted explanation of what thrust them up or why it occurred when and where, in each case, it did so.

The theory is a consequence of the discovery that the earth's crust is formed of great plates, both continental and oceanic, that move independently, colliding or overriding one another.

Tectonics is the science dealing with processes that have formed the mountains and other surface features of the earth.

A short time ago a series of maps was made public showing how movements of the earth's crystal plates fore apart an ancient supercontinent some 200 million years ago and transported the fragments to the present locations of the continents.

According to the new theory, encounters between such drifting plates account for all the world's major mountain systems.

While the theory has evolved in stages, with many contributors, it has now been set forth in detail by two geologists.

Great Plates Form Earth Crust

They are Dr. John M. Bird, head of the geology department at the State University of New York in Albany, and Dr. John F. Dewey of Cambridge University in England. Their presentations appear in recent issues of the Journal of Geophysical Research and the Geological Society of America Bulletin.

The two geologists have sought, through detailed analysis, to explain the complex rock structures of various mountain systems. Even in as relatively simple an encounter as that between South America and the Pacific Ocean floor the effects are manifold.

In such a process the ocean plate is warped downward where it meets the offshore edge of the continental rock in a slope known as the Benioff Zone. This is the region of frequent earthquakes.

Where the plate first bends down there is a trench in the sea bottom and earthquakes near there are of shallow origin. However, the Benioff Zone, as it extends inland, slopes down several hundred miles, as shown by the pinpointing of its earthquakes.

At such depths pressures and temperatures become so great that some components of the oceanic plate melt and force their way to the surface in volcanic eruptions. The penetration of oceanic material also humps the rim of the continent.

There is upwelling of lava into midocean ridges, Bird says, but it does not provide enough energy to push the plates. Where an oceanic plate (the entire eastern Atlantic constitutes a single plate) has become thick, cool and heavy near its continental margin, in his view, and its own weight may cause it to sink, pulling the rest of the plate slowly behind it.

An analogy, Bird said in a recent telephone interview, would be a towel that floats on water until one edge becomes soaked and sinks, pulling the rest behind it.

Real Estate Promotion, Circa 1891

By ELIZABETH FORBES

Did you know that once upon a time in the long, long ago, a semi-monthly newspaper was published in Victoria called the Mount Tolmie Herald? I'm not sure how long it lasted or how many issues were produced.

Forbes

But beside me as I write is a copy of the first edition, dated September 19, 1891, and it's devoted to one thing and one thing only. A ploy to sell lots and homes in what was designated as Mount Tolmie Park.

The four-page paper (it would be called a flyer today) was published by the Mount Tolmie Home Building Association. I went delving to find out something about this group and I discovered it was headed by an Englishman named Henry Croasdaile who seemingly had a vision of Victoria's future growth.

In the shadows behind him was landowner and sportsman J. H. Brownlee who in some sort of a deal had acquired Mount Tolmie and much of the land around its base.

Brownlee had built a road of sorts to the top of the mountain (the one we know as Mayfair Drive today). But no one seemed interested in buying that far out in the 1890s because the few street cars up Fort Street ended their run at the Royal Jubilee Hospital. And it was a long trek from there to Mount Tolmie.

★ ★ ★

It was then that Croasdaile (not long out from England) came up with his offer to take over the land and subdivide it into lots. He also dreamed up an idea of giving free plans for houses that could be built on property sold.

Then, as an added incentive, he offered an insurance policy with the down payment, to cover remaining payments and to ensure clear title to her in case of a home-owner's death.

With Brownlee's blessing and the preliminaries cleared away, Croasdaile went about arranging details for sale of the property. That's where his newspaper came in.

This first issue leads off with an eulogy on Mount Tolmie Park. "No other site adjacent to Victoria . . . can present so many claims to the consideration of the discriminating seeker of a delightful suburban home."

There's a bit about the view "Sublime and unobstructed" and a promise that within a year of September 30, 1891 "the Mount Tolmie Home Building Association guarantee a tramway in operation to Mount Tolmie Park, and until the road is completed will furnish transportation by bus (horse drawn) from the present terminus of the electric line at the Jubilee Hospital, for a five-cent fare, with rapid service and close connection."

★ ★ ★

In a final dramatic move Croasdaile invited the public to an all-day reception at Mount Tolmie Park. Horse-drawn buses would meet every tramcar at Jubilee Hospital, the little paper said. Refreshments would be served. And "in no instance would guests be solicited to buy property as no lots or houses will be sold in advance of the opening sale" set for the following Monday at 9 a.m. at the Fort Street office.

Centre spread of the little paper has pen and ink sketches of homes with plans attached. They run from a modest cottage at $700 to a palatial two-storey place at $1,700.

Believe it or not—houses costing $700 and on lots 60x100 feet, were offered for $25 cash, $50 when plans were selected, $5 a month until the house was completed and $20 a month from then on for a period of 72 months from date of purchase.

A sliding scale upward from there ended with double the amount in the various payments for a $1,700 mansion.

Boast was made in the Herald that 200 houses would be erected at Mount Tolmie Park "beginning immediately." Purchasers of property were also given opportunity to participate equally with the association "in whatever profits there may be in the undertaking."

To induce them to take this additional interest, a limited number of paid-up shares of the capital stock were offered for sale, such shares to be accepted at par in payment of purchase price of lots.

It was all pretty much of a gamble but on that Monday morning 50 lots and 18 houses were sold in the first hour. And before he was through Croasdaile had got rid of the whole works.

BOAC

British Overseas Airways Corp. had a profit of $21.3 million for the six months ended Oct. 17, a decrease from last year.

The government-owned airline said the outlook for the 1970-1971 fiscal year showed profits considerably lower than the $48.25 million recorded in 1969-1970.

One factor affecting the BOAC outlook is establishment of a "second force" private airline, Caledonian-British United, and the prospect that some of the more profitable routes now owned by BOAC and British European Airways, the second government-owned company, will be transferred to Caledonian.

Gunnar

Gunnar Mining Ltd., which came under control of a British firm earlier this year, reports a loss of $833,000 for the nine months to Sept. 30 compared with a loss of $163,000 form the corresponding period a year earlier.

Gunnar said revenue increased to $44.7 million from $40 million but provision for losses on two contracts and the cost of carrying large bank debt contributed to the loss.

Bovis Holdings Ltd. acquired control of the company for $9 million. Gunnar operates a group of mining and construction companies.

Q Broadcasting

Q Broadcasting Ltd. reports an increase in net profit of 27.1 per cent for the year ended Aug. 31, 1970.

President Bill Bellman said a net profit of $276,000, or 72 cents a share, was earned on a gross revenue of $2.3 million, up from $1.9 million in the previous 12-month period.

The year covered in the report was the Vancouver firm's first year as a public company. It owns and operates radio stations CHQM and CHQM-FM Vancouver, radio station CKPG Prince George, CKPG-TV Prince George and the Q Music Service, based in Vancouver.

Cadillac

Net earnings of Cadillac Development Corp Ltd. by the end of nine months this year were .3 of a cent higher than a year ago on a per share basis exclusive of extraordinary income.

But adding 15.6 cents a share ($1.42 million) to last year's firgure for sale of shares in another company brought the net income per share to 33.4 cents ($3.24 million) compared with 18.1 cents ($1.8 million) this year.

Net rental income was $2.6 million in the period this year ($2.4 million in 1969), but sales profit was down leaving consolidated income at $4.16 million ($4.18 million).

B.C. Mineral Production Value Gains

Value of mineral production in B.C. increased about seven per cent this year over 1969, according to preliminary estimates of the provincial department of mines and petroleum resources.

The estimated total is $486.8 million, up from $464.3 million in 1969.

Copper increased by $17 million to $128 million to hold top place in value.

Crude oil was up $4 million to $62 million and molybdenum, up $15 million at $61.8 million, took third place from zinc.

Zinc production fell $5 million to $42 million but maintained its place ahead of lead, up $2 million to $35 million.

Other major values were natural gas, up $3 million to $30 million; coal, up $14 million to $22 million; iron concentrates, down $2 million to $17 million; asbestos, up $1.5 million to $17 million, and silver, up slightly at $11.7 million.

The metal group rose $28 million to $322 million; fuels were up $22 million to $115 million; industrial minerals (including asbestos and sulphur), up $1 million at $22 million; and structural materials (including cement, sand and gravel), down $19 million to $36 million.

Mineral production is expected to top the $500 million mark next year with copper retaining its leading position, while new coal contracts with Japan and a steady growth in oil and natural gas production will contribute to the expected rise.

Ford Canada Sales Hit Record Level

EDMONTON (CP) — Ford Motor Co. of Canada Ltd. had record sales in the first two months of the 1970 model year, president Roy F. Bennett said Tuesday.

"Our sales for the last 60 days are at an all-time record in Canada," he said in an interview during a western Canada tour.

"We see our sales up by 25 per cent for 1971."

Bennett attributed the sales increase to a general upswing in the economy, easier credit and lower interest rates.

Ford took 18 per cent of the small-car market in October, ahead of all manufacturers including imports from Germany and Japan.

He said the strike against General Motors Corp., which supplies 40 per cent of the Canadian car market, has opened the door slightly for Ford, which had 25 per cent of the market.

Bennett said the Canadian-American automobile agreement was working well and is not in jeopardy despite United States moves toward protectionism to curb a balance of payments problem.

The industry was reducing pollution despite an increasing number of cars. "Emissions of hydrocarbons have been reduced by 80 per cent, carbon monoxide is down by 70 per cent and we are working hard to reduce the pollution from nitrous oxides."

Balance Expected

REGINA (CP) — Provincial Treasurer D. G. Steuart said Tuesday that despite economic difficulties, Saskatchewan will end the current fiscal year with a balanced budget.

The $365 million budget for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1971, called for a deficit of $10.4 million, the first deficit since the Liberals formed a government in 1964.

Founder Dies

Credit System Urged

WINNIPEG (CP) — The Committee on Reorganization of Education has recommended a program of continuing progress for Manitoba's secondary school system in the first of a series of reports, suggesting implementation of a credit system similar to that now used in universities. Graduation from secondary school would require successful completion of a minimum number of credits over a four-year period.

Silence Requested

EDMONTON (CP) — Provincial civil servants have been asked not to talk to political or semi-political groups on subjects related to pollution and the environment, Health Minister James Henderson said Tuesday.

The request was made in a circular to government branches and departments. Henderson said in an interview the ruling would protect civil servants from becoming involved in political matters.

The ruling applies particularly to statements about the Athabasca-Peace delta which is a federal responsibility, the minister said.

The Metis Association of Alberta and various conservation groups have charged that the W. A. C. Bennett Dam on the Peace River in British Columbia has lowered water levels in the swampy delta, destroying breeding grounds for birds and animals and killing the trapping industry that residents of the area have depended on.

Factory Opens

ST. LAURENT, Man. (CP) — A wood products factory, initially employing 10 trainee-workers, has begun operations in what may become a model for co-operative ventures by Manitoba Metis communities. The factory is expected to employ about 40 persons by 1972 and will be managed by a Metis co-operative in this community about 45 miles northwest of Winnipeg.

President Returned

REGINA (CP) — Robert W. Thompson of Saskatoon Tuesday was returned as president of the Saskatchewan Liberal Association. Thompson, 34, was unopposed in his bid for a third one-year term. He urged the Liberals to prepare for a general election call.

Plan Flops

CALGARY (CP) — The twinning of Calgary and Quebec City has been a complete flop, Mayor Rod Sykes said Tuesday, and unless the concept can be used as more than a public relations gimmick it should be dropped.

The idea which made Calgary the "sister city" to Quebec was adopted with great fanfare several years ago but nothing came of it, the mayor said.

Saanich Budget Unbalanced By $35,000

The building slump in Saanich this year has cost the municipality $36,000 in permit fees it expected to receive and didn't.

The spiralling cost of welfare in British Columbia has added $184,000 to Saanich expenditures.

These, and other factors, mean that $35,000 is needed to balance the budget for 1970, finance committee was told Tuesday night.

Administrator John Tribe said a revised budget will be presented at Monday night's council meeting and the municipality "has to find some money."

He suggested that sufficient funds from what was set aside for Quadra Street widening, north of McKenzie Avenue, be used to balance the budget.

PERMITS DOWN

The building slump this year has seen permit values drop to $12.1 million compared with $19.6 million in the first 11 months of last year.

Welfare costs are set on a per capita basis by the provincial government and jumped from 96 cents per head at the beginning of this year to $1.58 in September.

The municipal budget, struck in April, set aside $710,000 but the subsequent increases have brought this to $894,000.

Riding Ring Proposed

Saanich parks and outdoor recreation committee agreed Tuesday night to recommend to council that an area in Elk-Beaver Lake regional park be set aside for a public riding ring.

The suggestion came from the Garden City Horsemen's Club, which suggested the site be on the old filter beds at the south end of Beaver Lake.

Municipal parks administrator Bert Richman didn't agree with this site, pointing out that the filter beds are used for a public car park in the summer and that a large amount of sawdust might pollute Colquitz Creek.

He said a more suitable site would be to the northwest of the filter beds, near the end of Beaver Lake Road. The committee agreed with this recommendation.

No Support For Clubs

Public support for private recreational clubs was quickly dashed at Saanich finance committee Tuesday night.

A letter from the Greater Victoria Chamber of Commerce got a "no action" reply and no discussion by committee members.

The chamber has said politicians should forget outdated hangups and accept as their responsibility the job of helping create and promote club facilities.

Saanich Mayor Hugh Curtis has said that financial support would mean municipalities using tax dollars of people for private clubs when many of them cannot afford to belong to the club in the first place.

Asylum Sought

PARIS (Reuter) — Victor Dimitriu, a former Romanian ambassador to France, has asked for political asylum here, French government officials said.

6-Month Deficit $142M in Alberta

EDMONTON (CP) — Higher operating costs and increased capital spending gave Alberta a record deficit of $142 million in the first half of the 1970-71 fiscal year, it was announced Tuesday.

Provincial auditor C. K. Huckvale said the total for the six months ended Sept. 30 was $70 million more than the deficit in the same period of the 1969-70 fiscal year.

Although he told a news conference the province's fiscal atmosphere is expected to improve in the second half of the year, the province still would need between $110 million and $115 million.

Provincial treasurer A. O. Aalborg predicted a $24 million surplus on operating expenditures in the budget but Huckvale's report showed a $97 million operating account deficit, up $78 million from the first half of the previous fiscal year.

A $39 million reduction in revenues from the sale of petroleum rights was described as one of the major levers behind the operating deficit loss and Huckvale said the year-end total could be down $50 million.

Offsetting this, however, were increased revenues from petroleum royalties, up $9.2 million from the same period a year ago; income taxes, up $25 million; liquor, up $5.26 million; and tobacco tax, up $3.54 million.

The low pressure centre off Vancouver Island continues to push a flow of cool Pacific air over Vancouver Island, lower mainland and the extreme southern interior with the balance of the province covered in cold Arctic air. There is still no sign of a change in the weather pattern through Thursday.

NUCLEAR EXPLOSIVE TEST FIZZLES

Plowshare Program Dug Under

By THOMAS O'TOOLE

WASHINGTON (WP) — The Nixon administration has decided to suspend temporarily the Plowshare Program to develop peaceful uses of nuclear explosives.

While not killing the controversial program outright, the White House is understood to have told the Atomic Energy Commission not to count on enough money in the fiscal 1972 budget to conduct a Plowshare shot.

This will be the second straight year the Nixonn administration has cut out funds for a Plowshare test, raising doubts in some observers' minds about the future of the entire Plowshare Program.

The last Plowshare test took place more than a year ago, and even if funds are restored in the fiscal 1973 budget to resume testing another test could not take place for at least another two years.

"This is a program that needs private industry participation to succeed," said one source favorable to Plowshare, "and private industry just isn't going to participate if there is no federal financial support."

NOT OPPOSED

While stressing that the White House is not opposed to Plowshare in principle, sources said the Nixon administration feels that the AEC has given the program a wrong direction at the same time that it has underestimated public opposition to some of the shots.

"The public just won't stand for excavation shots that release radiation to the atmosphere," one source said recently, "and it won't stand for tests that take place anywhere near a populated region of the country."

The source said he meant excavation tests like the planned use of a Plowshare explosion to dig harbors and canals. The source also said he felt it was unwise to develop tests like Project Ketch, a Plowshare program to store natural gas in Pennsylvania that was dropped two years ago.

The White House decision was viewed by some observers as a demand that the AEC revise Plowshare to emphasize one or two of the most obvious applications and no more.

$137.8M SPENT

In the 13 years since Plowshare began, the AEC has spent $137.8 million exploding 26 atomic devices in testing out Plowshare concepts. These ideas have ranged from the excavation of a pass through the California mountains to the mining of copper in Montana.

The most promising Plowshare concept is the use of an atomic explosion to stimulate natural gas production in deep wells.

Two of these tests have been conducted in the last three years. One called Rulison in Colorado brought AEC estimates that it freed eight trillion cubic feet of natural gas below 60,000 acres of land near Rifle, Colo.

The well is shut down temporarily, but is to be reopened in about two weeks for radiation testing.

Just how much money is in the fiscal 1972 budget for Plowshare is a secret right now, but it is understood to be no more than the $7 million appropriated in fiscal 1971.

This is enough to continue Rulison testing, keep key Plowshare personnel on the payroll and do a little research on development of a super-clean device that leaves almost no contaminating radiation behind after an explosion.

SAANICH APPROVES NEW BUS APPLICATION

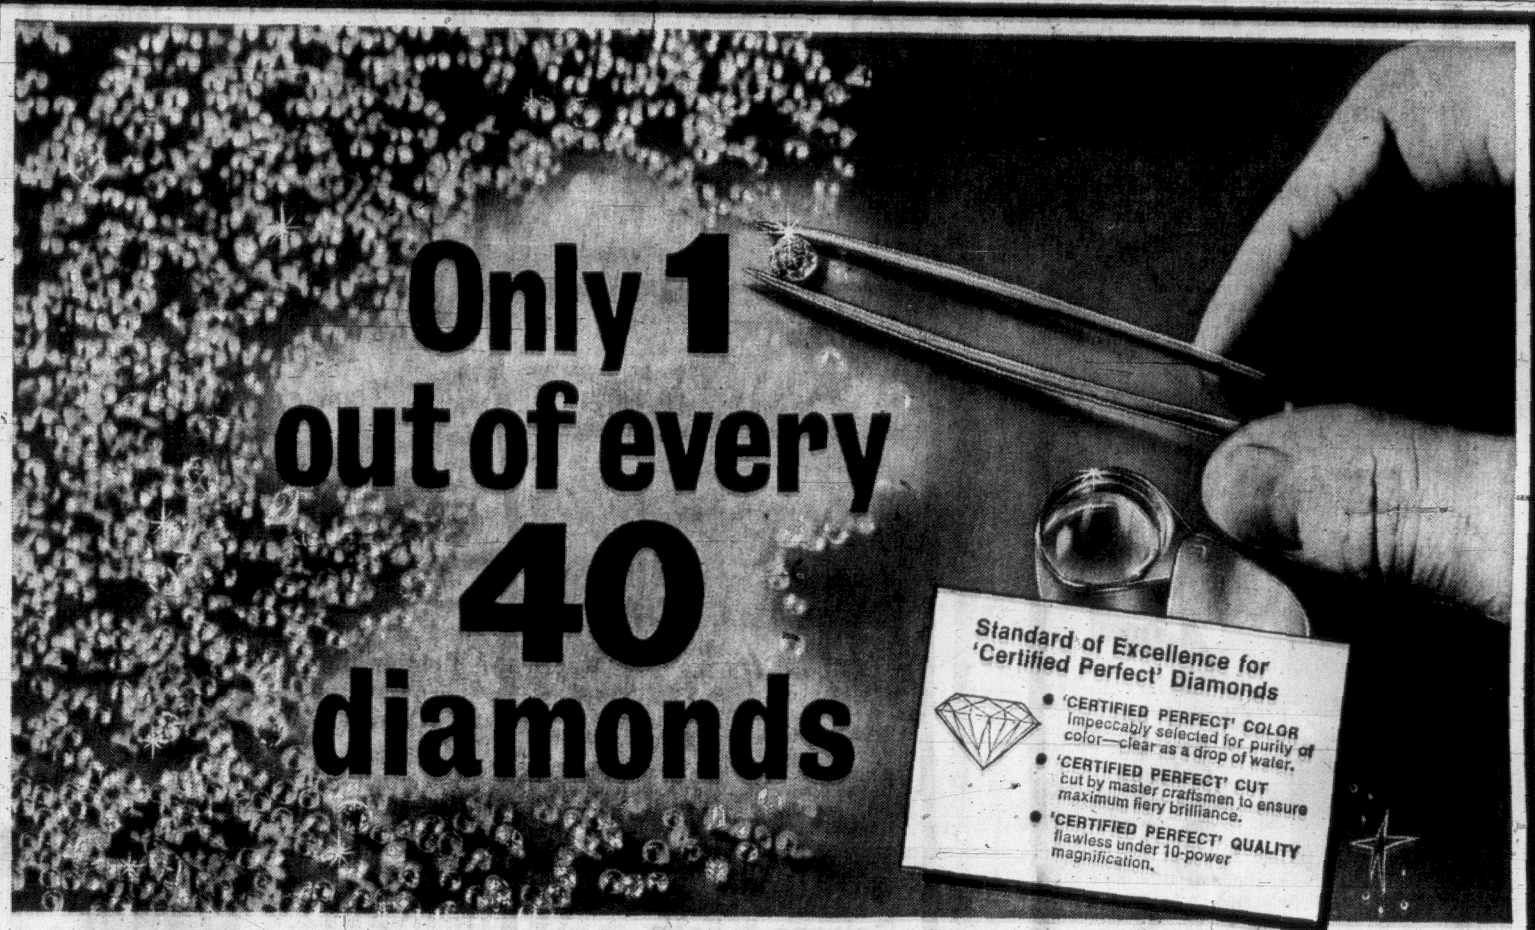

Saanich finance committee agreed Tuesday night to support W. O. McArthur who proposes to form his own company to double Saanich Peninsula bus service.

The committee, given power to act by council, said it is agreeable to McArthur's company taking over from Vancouver Island Coach Lines subject to Public Utilities Commission approval.

McArthur, a VICL employee who will resign when and if his service is approved, has also got approval from Sidney. When approval is given by Central Saanich and North Saanich, he will apply to the PUC to replace the VICL service, cut drastically in mid-November.

Aussies Salvage A Draw

BRISBANE (Reuter) — The first cricket test between Australia and England ended in a draw here today after England had set an impossible victory target of 184 runs in an hour.

Besieged by the England attack, Australia battled through a dangerous stage in the morning to a second innings total of 214. Time had run out for England when Australia was finally out, and England scored 39 for one in its second innings as the match fizzled out in a tame draw.

England was in with a chance when it quickly bagged Doug Walters's wicket this morning and Australia was 64 for three, only 33 runs ahead.

But skipper Bill Lawry, lucky to survive at times, stayed 320 minutes for 84, which included nine fours. He was jeered when he spent 44 minutes without scoring while in the 70s, but his innings saved Australia.

With Ian Redpath (28) he put on 73 for the fourth wicket and he was assisted by Paul Sheahan (36) in a fifth wicket partnership which added only 15 runs but occupied time which England could not afford.

First innings scores were Australia 433, England 464.

Ottawa Owner Steaming

OTTAWA (CP) — David Loeb, owner of Ottawa Rough Riders, said Monday he is considering a suit for damages against general manager Red O'Quinn of Montreal Alouettes.

Loeb said in an interview that he wants to "investigate more thoroughly" before taking any action.

O'Quinn has been quoted in an Ottawa newspaper as admitting he took Moses Denson off the Ottawa negotiation list and placed him on Montreal's while he still was general manager of Riders.

Eddie MacCabe of the Ottawa Journal in a sports page story Monday quoted sources chose to Loeb as saying the owner would take his case to court and "nobody will talk him out of it and nothing will stop him."

The sources were quoted as saying that Loeb was not seeking money but was taking court action "on the principle of the thing."

Logic Alien Item

Pro Football Utterly Baffling For Bystanders

By SHIRLEY POVICH
(The Washington Post)

WASHINGTON — The National Football League and logic have not been on good terms of late.

One case in point is the utterly baffling behavior of the New York Jets. With the incomparable Joe Namath at quarterback, their season was blighted with four defeats in their first five games. Yet on recent Sundays, with a substitute quarterback of dim fame in charge, the Jets took on the two teams generally rated the league's toughest, Minnesota and Los Angeles, and licked them both.

Another bewitching result last Sunday was the victory of the Boston Patriots over Buffalo. It was hardly expected that Boston would end its nine-game losing streak by defeating a team that, five weeks ago, beat the Patriots 45-10. But in the NFL this year, reason has been full of tricks.

★ ★ ★

Even as the Jets have been prospering without the supposedly indispensable Namath, the Patriots ended their skid on a Sunday when their big man, Joe Kapp, was benched. Mike Taliaferro got the job done for the Patriots, guiding them to two touchdowns after Kapp was removed in a coaching change.

Taliaferro's presence on the Patriots' bench was one of the reasons the Patriots felt constrained to give up No. 1 draft choice and a cornerback to the Vikings for the right to sign their malcontent, Kapp, at $100,000-plus for a number of years. Taliaferro had been tried and found wanting by the Jets before he had been tried and found wanting last season by the Patriots.

★ ★ ★

The Jets' new hero at quarterback is Al Woodall, the lad from Duke, who was only the dimmest kind of No. 2 quarterback behind Namath the past two seasons. It was quite unthinkable that Namath's backup man would bring the Jets their proudest victories of the season. But as has been suggested, there has been more madness than reason in some of this year's NFL developments.

The Cincinnati Bengals, too, have been in full rebellion against all the logic of their case. They were supposed to be in a horrible fix when they lost their fine quarterback, last season's "rookie-of-the-year," Greg Cook, before the season opened. Yet with a Chicago Bear reject, Virgil Carter, they are tied for the lead in their division.

It may be pointed out that tying for the lead in the Bengal's division doesn't take much, merely a 5-6 record. But three teams share the division lead with that less-than-.500 percentage, another example of the vast illogic that has been pervading the whole NFL.

★ ★ ★

And in the Western Division of the National Conference, it may just be dawning on the San Francisco 49ers that that last touchdown in their 30-13 rout by the Rams Sunday was not as necessarily as unimportant as it seemed at the time. Instead of being just a superfluous Rams' touchdown, it could have a killing significance for the 49ers.

In the event that the Rams and San Francisco tie for the division lead, and the tie cannot be resolved by their won-lost records within the division and the conference, it would be broken in favor of the team that scored the most points in their two head-to-head battles this season.

On that basis, the last touchdown by the Rams, scored in the absolute last second of play, would serve them well. It enabled the Rams to exceed the margin of 14 points by which the 49ers won the first game between the two teams.

What may have appeared to be a so-what touchdown could prove costly to the 49ers. It could be the means of keeping them out of the inter-division playoffs and could even cost them a payday of as much as a $25,000 for each 49er in the Super Bowl game.

Robinson Paces SFU to Victory

BURNABY (CP) — Simon Fraser University Clansmen scored their fifth straight win with an 80-65 non-conference basketball victory Tuesday over Pacific Lutheran University of Tacoma.

Bill Robinson of Chemainus scored 20 points for Simon Fraser while Larry Clark had 14 and Wayne Morgan 18.

SCHOOL STARS STILL PLAYING AND HOPING

Fingers crossed, these five players are among more that two dozen district high school soccer standouts looking for selection to 17-member all-star team that will tour Great Britain in spring. From left, Danny Henry of Claremont, Bob Bolitho of Mount View, George Hyne of Esquimalt, Robert Gutierrez of Oak Bay and Rick Wardle of Mt. Douglas. Nucleus of the tour team will be previewed Saturday at Royal Athletic Park when squad faces Armed Forces' best in benefit game for the late Gerry Mulholland. Navy band will provide half-time entertainment for Saturday's game, scheduled to start at 2 p.m. (Times photo by Irving Strickland).

Puerto Rica Shades Cents On Wild Pitch

BARRANQILLA, Colombia — A wild pitch by Murray Gage-Cole of Vancouver in the eighth inning gave Puerto Rico a 2-1 victory over Canada on the last day of the world amateur baseball championships.

The Canadians finished the round-robin event in a three-way tie with The Netherlands and Italy for last place, beating the Dutch, 4-0, Monday for their only win after losing their first eight games.

Canada, represented mainly by members of the Victoria Centennials, was to play Italy as well as Puerto Rico Tuesday, but the Italian game was called off.

Gage-Cole limited the Puerto Ricans to four hits in going the distance but a tying run in the second inning and the unearned score in the eighth sent him down to his fourth loss of the tournament.

His teammates collected eight hits, drew four bases on balls and had the advantage of three Puerto Rican errors, but couldn't push across more than their first-inning run.

ERRORS HELPED

That came when Barry Harvey of Victoria, on base on a fielder's choice, advanced on a single by Yves Blanchard of Montreal and scored when Russ Holmes of Victoria reached first base on an error.

Tom McKenzie of Kitchener, Ont., and Dave McKay of Vancouver each had two hits for the Canadians, who committed two errors.

TIE FOR LEAD

Cuba defeated Colombia 6-0 and ended in a tie with the United States for first place, each with 9-1 records. The Cubans and Americans will play a three-game series to decide the title.

The U.S. scheduled the first game today, but the Cubans protested, saying they had not been consulted and wanted a two-day layoff before the playoff.

In other games Tuesday, The Netherlands Antilles defeated Nicaragua 7-6 and the Dominican Republic overwhelmed The Netherlands 15-6.

Liston Treated After Car Crash

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Sonny Liston, former world heavyweight boxing champion, was reported in satisfactory condition in hospital Tuesday, six days after being injured in a traffic accident.

Liston suffered what the Nevada highway patrol described as minor injuries in an intersection accident. He was cited by the highway patrol for failure to yield the right of way.

Two days after the accident he was admitted to hospital.

Little Bear Wins Grappling Battle

Not Guilty Plea From Pitts' Wife

BRIGHTON, Colo. (AP) — Ethel J. Pitts, 34, pleaded innocent Monday to a charge of murder in the shooting death of her husband, Canadian Football League player Ernest Pitts.

Mrs. Pitts will go to trial March 16. She is free on $20,000 bond.

After all, here was a club labelled for the tail end of the NHL's East Division entrenched in fourth place ahead of three clubs, including two members of the establishment—Detroit Red Wings and Toronto Maple Leafs, with three wins, five losses and two ties.

Poile, whose years in hockey's front office should have dictated a more conservative forecast for his club, said at the time he could see no reason why the Canucks shouldn't remain fourth, even though 11 of their next 15 games were on the road.

"I don't say we are better than Detroit or Toronto, but we are certainly as good as Buffalo (Sabres)," he noted, including the other 1970 expansionist club in his division assessment.

LEAD WINGS BY FOUR

That 15-game span ended by Tuesday night and there was Vancouver still in fourth place after a 5-4 come-from-behind victory over Philadelphia Flyers.

The win, on the strength of third-period goals by Wayne Maki, with his second of the game and 11th of the year, and Ray Cullen, padded Vancouver's lead over fifth-place Detroit to four points and moved them to within two of third-place Montreal Canadiens.

In the 15-game stretch, the Canucks won six, lost eight and tied one to continue their surprise bid for a playoff spot in Vancouver's return to big-time hockey and another shot at the Stanley Cup, the trophy they won last with Vancouver Millionaires in 1915.

GARDNER GREAT

The Canucks opened up a 1-0 first period lead but trailed when Jim Johnson scored twice early in the middle period and the Flyers dominated play for most of the game.

Except for the outstanding acrobatics of Vancouver goaltender George Gardner, the outcome might have been otherwise as the 29-year-old native of Lachine, Que., kicked out 44 shots to stop the Philadelphians.

ROCKY TEACHES JAKE HIS 'LITERARY STYLE'

NEW YORK (AP) — Rocky Graziano gave what he called a "literary tea" Monday for his chum, Jake La Motta, who has just published his autobiography, Raging Bull.

There wasn't a drop of tea in sight, but more potent stuff flowed as the two former middleweight boxing champions mugged for reporters and cameramen.

"Rocky was my diction teacher," said La Motta and then, bewildered by a few of Rocky's cracks, remarked:

"The magnitude of your copious assertion is far too sagacious for my diminutive comprehension."

"I memorize pretty good," he said when asked how long it took to learn that statement.

Graziano won the crown in 1947 from Tony Zale and lost it to him again the next year. La Motta became champ in 1949 and lost the title to Sugar Ray Robinson in 1951. The sluggers never faced one another in the ring.

Rams' Quick Start Topples Hornets

Mount Douglas Rams pumped in two quick baskets to take a 4-0 lead in the opening minutes and were never headed in collecting a 57-40 Inter-High School Boys' Basketball League victory over host Mount View Hornets on Tuesday.

Victory evened the Rams' record at 1-1 and left them tied for second place with Reynolds, Belmont and Oak Bay. Victoria Totems hold the lead with two wins in two starts.

MT. DOUGLAS (57) — Jim Duddridge 12, Sid Chow 4, Brian Wright 16, John Jenner 9, Harry Hitchman, Greg Gardner 8, Doug Archibald, Bill Hingley 2, Brad Yakubowich, John Evans 2, Bruce Coulter 4.

Perfect Mark Brings Crown

Oak Bay rang up an impressive record of 17 wins and one tie in 18 starts to win the May Tully Shield, emblematic of supremacy in the Lower Vancouver Island Girls' Field Hockey League.

Esquimalt was the only club to avoid defeat at the hands of Bays when the teams fought to a 1-1 draw on Oct. 13 and the only other goal allowed by Oak Bay was during a 6-1 rout of Norfolk House on Oct. 1.

Esquimalt downed Claremont by default, Mount Douglas defeated Reynolds by default, Victoria edged Norfolk House 2-1 and St. Margaret's battled Mount View to a 1-1 tie in other final games.

FROM WHITE TO RED

Luis Changes Color of Sox

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Two rebuilding clubs have landed Luis Aparicio look-alikes at baseball's winter trade market, but the prototype shortstop belongs to Boston Red Sox today and they're building a penant dream.

Chicago White Sox, cleaning house after a last-place finish in the American League's Western Division, dealt Aparicio to Boston Tuesday for second baseman Mike Andrews and 21-year-old shortstop Luis Alvarado.

Meanwhile, Baltimore Orioles reluctantly parted with Aparicio's protege, 21-year-old shortstop Enzo Hernandez, in a six-player swap that also sent pitcher Tom Phoebus to San Diego Padres of the National League in exchange for pitchers Pat Dobson and Tom Dukes.

In other major league transactions, Atlanta Braves traded infielder Bob Aspromonte to New York Mets for reliever Ron Herbel and Houston Astros purchased catcher Jack Hiatt from Chicago Cubs.

COMPARED TO LUIS

"Reports from our scouts compare Alvarado to a young Luis Aparicio," Tanner said after the White Sox swung their third deal of the two-day-old winter meetings.

"I'm not saying Hernandez is another Aparicio, but he reminds me a lot of Luis when he was a kid," said Orioles' skipper Earl Weaver, whose world champs looked toward Dobson as another potential 20-game winner.

"We feel we can win the pennant with Aparicio," said the Red Sox, skipper, Eddie Kasko, who plans to shift Rico Petrocelli from short to third base to make room for the 155-pound veteran of 15 American League season.

Aparicio, a superb shortstop who has led the league in stolen bases nine times, batted a career-high .313 in 146 games last season.

ONCE WITH LEAFS

Andrews, 27 and at one time with Toronto Maple Leafs of the International League, batted .253 for the Red Sox, with 17 homers and 65 runs batted in.

Alvarado, the International League's Most Valuable Player in 1969, began his rookie American League season as Boston's regular third baseman but wound up dividing the year between the Red Sox and Louisville.

The Orioles, who traded veteran relief pitcher Moe Drabowsky to St. Louis Cardinals Monday, gave up Phoebus, Hernandez and pitchers Fred Benne and Al Severinsen to get Dobson and Dukes, San Diego's biggest winner and second-busiest reliever, respectively, last season.

BOWLER OF WEEK

Returning to winner's circle for fifth straight season is Bill Burke, who captured the men's tenpin award during eighth week of annual Times-sponsored Bowler-of-the-Week contest. Burke, who won roll-off crown for same division in 1967, earned weekly award and another berth in Bowler-of-the-Year rolloffs with 174-245-234—653 series in Friday Niters League at Mayfair Lanes.

'Old Order' Amateurs Against New Thinking

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The definition of "amateur athlete" in the United States must be cleansed of hypocrisy and updated to meet realistic modern demands, says John Kelly, first vice-president of the Amateur Athletic Union.

"We've got to get with it," said Kelly, here for the AAU convention. "We have to reimburse amateur athletes who take time off from their jobs."

The former rowing champion is a four-time Olympic games sculler and possibly the next AAU president.

In the AAU tradition, ascension of the first vice-president to president is a sure thing, but some of the old order types who rule the union don't accept Kelly's ideas.

"I'm of the Avery Brundage school . . . I think commercialism is ruining sport. With the current bend toward professional sports in the land, unless we have a great economic depression we may see the end of amateur sport, of the Olympic games as we know them."

"There could be trouble about his (Kelly's) moving in to succeed Jesse in the election Friday. The next man up, David Ravines might pass him up."

Victory brought Drakes within two points of Hotel Douglas and Labatts, tied for the league lead with six points each.

Carry Andrews and Jim Cunningham fired 16 points apiece while Ed Steele (15), Wayne Allen (13), Dave Price (12) and Paul Drummond (11) also contributed heavily to the attack.

SAINTS WILL HELP . . . . . IN FIGHT WITH ALI

Daisy's Charm in Oscar's Corner

NEW YORK (AP) — Daisy, the Latin American bombshell, has put her magic spell on Oscar Bonavena and predicts that the Argentine heavyweight is a cinch to stop Muhammad Ali in their 15-round fight at the Garden next Monday night.

"I do nothing bad to Ali, I just pass all my good luck along to Ringo," the curvaceous actress, singer and dancer from Puerto Rico said today, using the popular nickname for her longtime friend and movie co-star.

"I put a special string of beads around Ringo's neck, I feed and talk to my saints. Ringo cannot lose."

Daisy Guzman, 25, a flowered pants suit covering her 36-23-37 figure and a matching silk handkerchief knotted about her long, blonde tresses, was on hand to greet her ring hero when Bonavena came in from Grossinger's Tuesday for his formal physical examination.

She was permitted in Bonavena's dressing room where she proceeded to rub the red beads between her hands, drape them over the fighter's neck and then climax the ceremony with a buss on the cheek.

"I did the same thing five years ago in Buenos Aires when I first met him."

"He won his fight and has had much good luck since. If he keeps this good luck charm on his person Monday night he will win again."

She said on the night before she had given the beads a special blessing when she placed food and tequila before her saints.

"I have a whole cabinet of saints," she said. "They will take care of Ringo for me."

CURVED BLADE . . . . . NOT MISSED BY HADFIELD

Backhander Returns to Hockey

NEW YORK (AP) — Vic Hadfield fingered the straight blade of his hockey stick and a devilish grin curled his lip.

"You know," said the New York Ranger left winger, "it's a funny feeling to have a back-hander again."

Hadfield, like several other National Hockey League shoothers, has rediscovered the backhand shot as an offensive weapon now that the curved stick has been all but legislated out of existence.

Chicago's Stan Mikita and Bobby Hull, who started the hooked blade trend some eight years ago, Phil Esposito of Boston and New York's Hadfield and Rod Gilbert were the players most affected by the NHL's ruling last summer which cut the allowed curve down to a meagre one-half inch.

"It's the goalies," said Hadfield. "They were always complaining.

"And you know. They're always making new rules to hurt the shooters."

If the goalies were complaining about the curved sticks, it wasn't without reason. The hooked blade made sticks act like sling shots and often the puck would sail or dip as it neared the net. They made goaltending an even more hazardous profession than it already was.

At the height of the curved stick craze, blades were hooked 1½ inches, providing a neat pocket in which skaters could cradle the puck. But the hook necessarily eliminated the back-hand as an effective manoeuvre.

That didn't seem to bother Mikita, Chicago's slick little centre, who is credited with producing the first curved stick when he stuck a blade under a dressing room door. He could manoeuvre the puck almost as if it were on a string with his curved blade. Now he is in a quandary.

"I can't seem to find the right lie with a straight stick," said Mikita. "I haven't found one I can use." The lie refers to the angle of the stick to the ice.

Hull made the curved blade a dangerous weapon and used it to set a single-season record with 58 goals a couple of years ago. He wasn't happy about having to discard it.

"With the big hook you could pull the puck in and fling it," Hull said. "Now you've got to stay with it and follow through or else it will slice. It bothers the velocity of my shot."

It was one of Hull's sticks that got Hadfield started on the hook. Vic had broken a stick in a pre-game practice in Chicago a couple of years ago and Hull lent him a spare. Hadfield enoyed immediate success and adopted the curve. Now he's not sorry to give it up.

"I've found I have more control over the puck now," said Hadfield. "Especially in the corners. With the hook, the puck seemed to always slide off the stick. Now it doesn't."

Esposito, who adopted the curve when he played with Hull and Mikita in Chicago, set a record of 126 points two years ago when the 1½-inch hook was allowed.

VIKING VIEWS

By Mark Hume

The Uvic hockey Vikings made it three for three over the weekend.

Three losses in three games.

On Sunday, even though they went under 7-3, they proved that they know what hockey is all about.

The Vikings played hard, out-skating and out-hitting their opponents, the UBC Thunderbirds. In fact, they did everything better than the Vancouver team except score more goals.

Uvic's defence held up under great pressure until about mid-way in the final period, but then fell apart and there was no saving them. The T-Birds put away four goals in as many minutes in that last period, to break a tie and take a four point lead.

★ ★ ★

UBC is billed as the top club in the league, and Vikings knew that, so perhaps that explains why they did so poorly in the first meeting Saturday, when they got bombed 14-3.

On the other hand it could be that the Uvic squad was still smarting from their Friday night game in the Vancouver Island League.

To most Viking players the Island league means little, in fact Viking manager Greg Larson said that "The Vikings are in the local league just to get the extra games."

If the Island league is just for practice purposes then, it's hard to understand why they'd bother to play a game the night before an important contest, as they did this weekend.

If the game wasn't important, they should have forfeited it and taken the opportunity to rest.

★ ★ ★

It may seem that the Vikings have an arrogant attitude, but in defence of them Larsen said "we didn't arrange this, we didn't have anything to do with it, it was the athletics department."

Athletics director Bob Bell said that he feels the players can handle both leagues.

He said that last weekend's results prove this.

The team played an extremely strong game on Sunday, he said, even though they had played on both Friday and Saturday.

The Vikings did play well, and they played hard, but they played losing hockey.

To repeat the stand taken in this column last week: the Vikings have the ability to be a real competitor in either league, but lack the depth to be able to play in both leagues. The three setbacks they suffered over the weekend seem to back this up.

This weekend the varsit hockey squad travels to Calgary to meet the best that the University of Calgary has to offer.

The Calgary Stags will probably be a typical prairie team, hitting hard and skating fast. The Vikings know how to play that brand of hockey too — they did it Sunday — and if they want it bad enough, they could collect a couple of wins in Alberta.

★ ★ ★

Basketball Vikings will be put to the test when they meet the undefeated University of Calgary squad at Uvic, in a WCIAA game Friday at 8 p.m.

The University of Lethbridge team will be in town Saturday, to take on the hoop Vikings. That game will also be at 8 p.m.

Jayvees, Uvic's junior men's basketball squad, will be battling Centralia Jr. College Friday and Saturday in preliminary matches.

Retirement Talk An Ottawa Worry

OTTAWA (CP) — Ottawa Rough Riders have an unaccustomed long winter to reflect on one of their most unrewarding recent seasons in the Eastern Football Conference.

And, after the defending Grey Cup champions slithered to the conference cellar in a single year, there seem to be more retirement rumors than in the past.

Veteran halfback Ron Stewart, who missed a good part of the schedule with a broken arm, has talked retirement after previous seasons and is doing it again this year, but with the rider:

"I won't make up my mind now—there's no hurry."

Much more determined about it is defensive half Joe Poirier, 33 and with 12 fine professional seasons behind him.

NO OFFICIAL WORD

Coach Jack Gotta said he has not heard officially from anyone, although acknowledging:

"Joe Poirier told me he's going to call it a day. But I suggested he think it over and then see me again in two or three weeks."

One of the strongest arguments Gotta will have in his favor is the pride of the players, few of whom would be content to leave after the down season the Riders experienced this year—catching fire only after they had been eliminated from playoff contention

Linemen Moe Racine and Tom Baynon also are talking about hanging them up.

Baynon, who missed much of the year with a broken arm, is entering hospital to have scar tissue removed from his forehead and says he has no idea jwhat will happen to his football.

TUCKER A QUESTION

Flanker Whit Tucker also is reported thinking about retiring, but was not available to confirm the reports.

Another question mark for next year, but not from retirement, is lineman Doug Collins. He is entering hospital for removal of a disc that has been pinching a nerve leading to his leg and which troubled him all season.

Browns' Coach Plans to Retire

CLEVELAND (AP) — Blanton Collier, coach of Cleveland Browns of the National Football League, said Tuesday he is retiring voluntarily at the end of this season to "go out under my own power."

Collier, 65, head coach of the Browns since the ouster of Paul Brown after the 1962 season, said his decision had nothing to do with the team's 5-6 record this season.

He said he told club owner Art Modell of his decision before the start of the season and told team members after Sunday's loss to Pittsburgh Steelers.

Defensive Brilliance Aids Lakers

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Los Angeles Lakers used defence Tuesday night to beat Baltimore Bullets 97-93 in a National Basketball Association game.

With the Lakers leading 95-93, first Wilt Chamberlain and then Jerry West came up with consecutive clutch defensive gems to save the game. Chamberlain blocked a shot by Earl Monroe and then West followed by blocking a shot by Kevin Loughery in the final seconds. Gail Goodrich then added two free throws to seal the victory.

On the offensive side, Chicago Bulls scored 17 straight points and went on to a 107-91 victory over Philadelphia 76ers, and New York Knicks shot 68.2 per cent from the field in the first half and breezed to a 114-109 triumph over Seattle.

Sonics rallied in the second half behind coach Lenny Wilkens, who had 29 points, but couldn't get closer than five points.

In other games, Boston Celtics squeezed past Buffalo Braves 117-116 in overtime for its fifth victory in a row, San Diego Rockets turned back Portland Trail Blazers 120-114 and San Francisco Warriors overcame Atlanta Hawks 113-106.

The Bullets had trouble scoring earlier against the Lakers, going the first six minutes of the third period without scoring and falling 12 points back after holding a 51-50 halftime lead.

Monroe, who scored 33 points, helped bring them back, but West, who hit 37, and Chamberlain cut short the rally.

Vikings Take No Chances

MINNEAPOLIS (AP) — Minnesota Vikings quarterback Gary Cuozzo, who sprained his right ankle in Sunday's 20-10 National Football League loss to the New York Jets, may miss Saturday's game against the Chicago Bears.

Coach Bud Grant said x-rays taken of Cuozzo's ankle disclosed no breaks. But, said Grant, "we're not going to send him in unless he's near 100 per cent."

If Cuozzo is still out by Saturday, Bob Lee will start his first NFL game and rookie-quarterback Bill Cappleman will be called up from the taxi squad.

Uvic Bows Again

SASKATOON — University of Saskatchewan Huskiettes captured sole possession of first place in the Western Canada Intercollegiate Athletic Association women's basketball league Tuesday with a 67-34 victory over University of Victoria Vikettes.

Depth and experience told the tale as Huskiettes romped to a 36-13 halftime lead and went on to defeat Vikettes for the second straight night.

Uvic coach Howard Tooby started with a zone defence but was forced to change to a one-on-one later, which proved slightly more successful.

Huskiettes' defence was also solid and forced Vikettes to make 42 turnovers, the same as in Monday's contest.

JOSSUL INJURIED

Val Girsberger led Huskiettes with 20 points while Joyce Elke chipped in 14 and former-Vikette Heather Witzel added 12.

Pam Hartnett scored 12 points to pace Vikettes, without the services of captain and scoring leader Rose Jossul for the second straight game. Miss Jossul is sidelined with a knee injury.

Fishman in Top Post As Lacrosse Expands

Dave Fishman of Burnaby has been appointed as the new national director of the Canadian Lacrosse Association.

In making the announcement, CLA president Jack Fulton noted that "lacrosse, after a registration increase nationally of approximately 30 per cent for each of the last three years, now has more than 150,000 registered players. Fishman's job will include maintaining this momentum, assisting the organizational development of lacrosse in new territories, and administrative duties."

Fishman was president of the B.C. Lacrosse Association for the past two years and will vacate this position in January when he moves to Ottawa and assumes the new position.

The new director was selected out of approximately 50 applicants from across Canada. Fishman has held administrative positions in rugby and ice hockey as well as lacrosse.

Meanwhile directors of the Western Lacrosse Association met in Vancouver at the weekend to discuss possible television coverage during the 1971 season.

WLA commissioner Tom English said after the meeting that while no firm decision has been made, the opportunity to televise several games would be pursued.

"We're interested," he said, "because we feel it would mean a great deal more exposure for the game."

The CBC has inquired about the possibility of television up to 10 games including three from the 1971 Canadian final.

Seven of the telecasts would originate from eastern Canada while the other three would come from Greater Vancouver. The 1971 national final is scheduled to be played in the east.

SENT DOWN to Phoenix of Western League by National Hockey League's Minnesota North Stars is former Victoria winger Bob Barlow. He scored 16 goals last season, failed to connect in eight games this year.

'I FIGURED NOTHING IS IMPOSSIBLE'

How One Man Rescued Old Two Spot

By DONNA CLEMENTS

DUNCAN — They all told Granger Taylor he was crazy to try and restore the 1910 Climax logging steam locomotive.

That was in 1969.

Today he has "Old Two Spot" shipshape, his own backyard railroad — and a steady stream of admirers.

The 22-year-old Duncan logger, bulldozer operator and self-taught heavy-duty mechanic found the 23-ton moss-covered wreck nestled in the woods with an 18-inch diameter tree growing in the middle.

"A year ago my parents and I hiked in where we heard the locie was," Taylor said. "I love working with any old engine and machinery. I was just thrilled to see the old wreck. I didn't know the first thing about locomotives before that."

●

Friends told him he would never be able to restore it.

"I figured nothing is impossible and I could do it," he said.

Now after a year's patient creative work Taylor has Old Two Spot sparkling and waiting to be steamed up.

Taylor took a few trial runs down his 100 yards of track but he doesn't plan to set his new toy in motion again until next year.

After finding the locie on Mile 62 of the CNR west of Duncan and getting permission from property owners to take it, Taylor said he had to wait four months before the Cowichan River could be forded and he could move his find to his home.

After building a one-half mile road to the locie Taylor and two friends then dug a huge pit in front of the locie so they could back a logging truck to her and pull her on with a winch on a cat.

The two-day project of moving the old locie next involved adding another set of wheels and then crossing the river with the cat anchoring the truck against runaway on the steep grade.

●

"Once we were across the river I knew I had it made," he said.

Taylor said he then had to manufacture a new cylinder casting for one side, build a cab, rebuild boiler and undercarriage.

"To completely restore Old Two Spot it cost me $200 for materials."

He than laid down 100 yards of track which he had picked up from old logging grades.

"My railway cost me $22."

When he checked into Old Two Spot's history Taylor found she is the oldest, smallest Climax in existence.

"All of the older ones were either scrapped, burned or lost."

"Old Two Spot was purchased new in 1910 by the Shawnigan Lake Lumber Co. For many years she was the only companion to the company's "Old Betsy," A class A Climax Pole Railway Locomotive.

That is where the name "Old Two Spot" came from.

"Old Betsy, built in 1902, the company's first locomotive, was burned in a mill fire. I have her original diamond stack on Old Two Spot."

Taylor said in 1922 Old Two Spot was sold to Channel Logging.

"In 1927 she was seized by Cameron Logging because Channel Logging accidentally went into their claim and could not pay for the timber they took.

"Old Two Spot drew a final breath through her iron lungs at that time because Cameron Logging ran her on to his grade where she remained until I moved her in 1969."

For a companion to the logging steam locomotive, Taylor has a 25-ton locomotive crane built by Industrial Works in 1914.

"The crane was used by Hudson Railway and then shipped to Paldi and used by Mayo Lumber Co. for general work until they retired her in 1964."

He also has 30 old one-cylinder engines of all descriptions, a homemade horseless carriage type car that he built from various parts of old cars.

INFLUX SINCE SHOOTING BANNED

Smooth Landings for Ducks

NORTH COWICHAN — Since North Cowichan council banned hunting on Somenos Lake there has been an increase of about 2,700 ducks sighted in the area.

Cmdr. G. D. Windeyer, who runs Somenos Lake Farm, and ornighologist John Comer, who contributes regularly to the Audubon Society's quarterly journal giving bird count details, said this week they had noted an "unprecedented increase" in ducks since shooting stopped.

Comer, who said he is able to give fairly accurate figures on the different species on the lake with his powerful telescope, said he counted 1,000 widgeons, 900 pintails, 500 mallards, 200 mergansers and flocks of buffleheads, greenwinged teal, shovellers, lesser scaups and ruddy ducks.

Comer expects that by Christmas the mallards will increase to about 1,600, the pintails will also near that figure, and the widgeons could total 2,000.

He said that Windeyer had helped considerably by planting wild rice and Austrian peas.

"I would say this is the only fresh water feeding area in the Cowichan Valley," Comer said.

He said that counts at marsh areas of Chemainus and Westholme were negligible.

In addition to the ducks at Somenos, they have also been observing five trumpeter swans, with one cygnet, and seven mute swans.

"The council should be commended for its foresight," Windeyer said.

"Before, hunters were shooting everywhere. The ducks had no chance to land, feed and rest."

New Bankruptcy Act to Place Emphasis on Individual

By JOHN MIKA
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA—the federal government's plans to throw out the present Bankruptcy Act and bring in radically different legislation next spring will have its biggest impact on individuals.

It should revive hope for the wage-earner who has dropped into such a deep pit of debt he could never climb out.

It should console the creditor with a better recovery rate.

It should discourage the reckless operator who fast-talks poor credit risks into buying now and paying later for the sake of an immediate sale.

LONG STUDY

At least, those are the targets of the legislation Consumer and Corporate Affairs Minister Ron Basford will pilot into the statute books after months of detailed studies and preparation by a substantial portion of his department.

The biggest single change in the coming bill will be a new emphasis on making the bankruptcy process serve Joe Lunchpail as well as E. P. Countryclub when either finds himself insolvent.

The purpose, of course, is to ensure that both pay their debts systematically without destroying themselves.

In extreme cases, it will ensure that they pay back as much as is reasonably possible and then be allowed to make a fresh, and hopefully wiser, start.

While application may be radically enlarged, the basic philosophy of the new bill remains founded on realism rather than idealism.

RISKS

The industrial revolution depended on entrepeneurs undertaking risks with borrowed capital. Simple idealism demanded disaster insurance so the bankruptcy process evolved as a fall-back position for those ventures which failed, treating the entrepeneur and his creditors as equitably as possible.

In the last couple of decades the industrial machine has come to depend upon the consumer undertaking instalment debt. Simple realism demands he too be given a fall-back position in the event of personal financial disaster.

"It becomes almost one's patriotic duty to consume and support the system by conspicuous consumption," Basford told an audience here a few months ago.

"In a comparatively short period of time, our economy has changed from 'pay as you go' to a 'go now, pay later' economy.

DESTROYED

"This is so true that unless we recognize it in our legislation, the social, moral and economic problems created by this change to a credit economy will grow until the system is endangered if not destroyed."

The minister already has done a little to help—by persuading several provinces to adopt complementary regulations so that Part 10 of the existing federal Bankruptcy Act became more useful, and in some cases available for the first time, to ordinary Canadians.

'Should Discourage Fast-Talking, Reckless Operator'

This part enables a wage earner overburdened with debt to apply for a court devt consolidation order which sets up a master schedule of repayment and prhobits creditors from hounding him so long as he keeps up the schedule.

400 ORDERS

Since Basford's initiative, about 18 such orders have been obtained for Vancouverites by the Inner City Project there and 400 have been issued during the past year in Toronto alone.

But helpful as that may be, it still falls far short of the need and the new bill will refine this avenue as well as opening an entirely new approach.

Basford contends there are two types of insolvent consumers. First, the wage earner who gets over his head into debt by bad luck or bad management but could work his way back to solvency if given enough time. Second is the man who falls so deeply into debt—through debilitating illness or catastrophic mistake—that his earning capacity could never repay it in his lifetime.

"The first case should be able to make a proposal to a court for consolidation of his debts, spreading the payments over a reasonable period to cover the capital and a nominal interest and the creditors should be compelled to accept," the minister explained.

"In this way, the debtor will maintain his solvency and his dignity while the creditor would be paid off in full, although perhaps he might be denied some of the interest had the original contract been fulfilled."

The hopeless case should go through the same court procedure of setting a repayment schedule but with two alterations to bring them rehabilitation. After a reasonable number of years of meeting the monthly court-ordered instalments, his remaining debt should be written off.

"But during this period, the debtor would have to submit to the discipline of regular payments, restricted credit and compulsory credit counselling . . . until he can again stand up to the pressures of the market place."

Basford says the losses sustained by creditors under this system would be smaller than they are now when repossessions and resales bring a national average recovery of six cents on the dollar for creditors.

SLOPPY

But it would also have a salutory effect on credit granters who are sloppy in taking risks or even deliberately oversell the gullible, by making them help pay the costs of such practices.

The coming bankruptcy bill should be regarded "not only as a commercial instrument but as a social instrument which properly devised can be instrumental in curing some of the social ills created by a credit-oriented economy and society," says the minister.

He intends to bring in companion bills to overhaul the Interest Act and Small Loans Act to require full advance disclosure of the costs of credit, and remove some of the pressuring abuses in the "hard sell" technique.

Basford admits that the provinces of Ontario and B.C. have briskly led the federal government in these reforms and he wants to catch up in order to promote a uniform improvement across the country for consumers.

RACKETEERS

However, besides the needs of the wage-earning consumer, the bankrupty bill under preparation will reach out to nab the racketeers who take over a company, siphon off its assets into personal pockts and then put the company into bankruptcy to liquidate their obligations as officers.

"We've already made strenuous efforts to crack down on these fraudulent bankruptices, by toughening up licensing of trustees and expanding the RCMP's fraud squad of specialists," Basford said.

"We've been able to cut down a great deal of abuse but we need new legislative procedures to get at these people who hide behind the juristic concept of corporate personality."

That's the concept that enables company directors to escape direct personal responsibility for the actions of a company which do not overtly violate specific requirements of the law.

The answer obviously, as President Woodrow Wilson once put it, is: "to stop financial joyriding, arrest the chauffeur and not the automobile."

But the problem is that corporate personality is built into the system and is a valuable principle which protects honest directors from legal ambush if the company doesn't make a go of it.

"It is imperative that we develop very sophisticated methods of legislation to solve this particular problem of lifting the veil of corporate personality enough to get at those who abuse the rights of incorporation and at the same time protect those who do not," says Basford.

'White Collar Criminal Doesn't Consider Self a Thief'

EDMONTON (CP) — A fraud expert contends that crime in the office is increasing because of "our permissive society."

Inspector William LaFeuvre, in charge of the fraud detail of the Edmonton police department, also said that "just because he wouldn't think of robbing a bank," the white-collar criminal in an office does not consider himself a thief.

Inspector LaFeuvre added that the office character does not consider himself a thief or criminal when he juggles his employer's books, dips into petty cash or starts systematically looting a stock room.

PUBLIC PAYS

What the average person doesn't seem to realize, Inspector LaFeuvre said in an interview, is that "the honest public pays."

Most white-collar criminals are "ordinarily honest but succumb to temptations because of outside influences beyond their control." These people are "terribly obvious" and are "the easiest to catch and convict." He contended that blame for these crimes should not fall on the individual but on what he called "managerial sins."

Inspector LaFeuvre said most of the white-collar criminals caught often have what they feel is "a valid reason for their thefts."

MANY REASONS

"It can be a promotion passover, preferential treatment of someone else, low salary, his working conditions or poor fringe benefits.

"But these are not valid excuses. What they did was steal — in often weird and wondrous ways."

Asked about how to combat losses of either money or materials from offices, Inspector LaFeuvre said the basic defence is a well-paid, happy office staff.

"Then make sure you have a strict inventory control; know how much of anything you have on hand at any given time."

WILL TRY AGAIN

And if an employee is caught stealing, report him to police immediately. Many companies often only fire the individual.

"But if that is done — he heads for another company and seeing he got away with nothing worse than firing the first time he'll try it again — and he'll probably get away with it again.

"Human beings being what they are, if they figure they can do something and get away with it, seven out of 10 will do it."

He said the ingenuity of mankind, building through the ages, both baffles and amuses him.

Spoiler Warning Sign 'Not Enough'

TORONTO (CP) — Metal warning plaques forbidding deployment of ground spoilers while DC-8 passenger jets are still in the air would not be sufficient to prevent accidents similar to the one which claimed 109 lives here July 5, a federal inquiry has been told.

The inquiry learned that premature deployment of spoilers caused the jet to bounce on a runway hard enough to tear off an engine. Spewing fuel and with wires sparking, it circled for another landing attempt but exploded and crashed.

Inquiry commissioner Mr. Justice Hugh Gibson of the Exchequer Court of Canada was given 15 recommendations Tuesday by federal transport department air accident specialists.

SLOW AIRCRAFT

The warning of the inadequacy of the metal plaques, to be installed on all DC-8s in North America as a result of the inquiry, came from Dr. F. H. Hemming, a specialist in aviation medicine.

He called the spoilers a potential hazard because one control lever in the cockpit has three distinct functions.

The spoilers are metal flaps on the wings which, when activated on contact with the ground, slow and steady the aircraft as it rolls to a stop. The one lever, between pilot and co-pilot, can arm the spoilers for automatic deployment on touchdown, can be used to deploy the spoilers manually and can be used manually to abort a take-off.

A major recommendation to the inquiry was that DC-8 pilots be warned immediately of loss of an engine through an alarm system of bells and red lights in the cockpit.

The specialists said vital flight safety information on the operation of the world's most extensively used passenger jet had not been available to pilots. Witnesses testified pilots cannot see the engines from the flight decks.

There now are 509 DC-8s in service for 44 airlines with a total of 8,120,000 hours in the air. If the recommendations are incorporated into the inquiry's report, it would be difficult for McDonnell Douglas, the DC-8 builders—or the airlines—to ignore them.

CONTROLLERS CLEARED

The investigators found no fault with the performance of air traffic controllers at Toronto International Airport. Control Officer Andris Vasarins and his supervisor, Thomas Taylor, both testified they could not make out clearly what had happened on the runway on the landing of Flight 621, stopping over here on a Montreal-to-Los Angeles run.

"At that stage of the game, I thought it would be adding insult to injury by telling him (the pilot) that something had fallen off on the runway," said Mr. Taylor.

The recommendations also said the structural design of the aircraft should be "reconsidered" and that the ground spoiler braking system's deployment system should be redesigned.

They said the spoiler lever in the cockpit between the pilot and first officer is a "potential hazard" because, as designed, it allows the spoilers to be deployed in the air, though this never should occur.

The Air Canada jet dropped 60 feet to the runway when the spoiler system was deployed inadvertently in the air by the co-pilot, the inquiry was told.

CALLS FOR ARMING

The Air Canada flight manual calls for them to be armed at 2,000 feet for automatic deployment when the wheels touch down.

Arthur LeCheminant, an engineering specialist, said the plane's manufacturers should reconsider the "failsafe" design which is intended to allow the engine and its mounting to separate smoothly from the wing without tearing away wing plates.

Witnesses testified the engine in tearing loose took part of the fuel tanks which loosed jet fuel, set afire by trailing shorting electrical wires. This caused the three explosions that sent the plane into the ground.

Mr. LeCheminant said that present air regulations in the United States requiring the structural design of an aircraft to withstand impact from a descent of 10 feet a second were inadequate. Testimony has been that the plane dropped between 17 and 19 feet a secon after the spoilers were deployed.

CALLS FOR INSTRUMENT

Among other recommendations:

—Some sort of cockpit instrument installed that will indicate when a plane hits a runawy too hard on landing. It should show the stress on the aircraft's structure.

—The flight deck should be equipped with "the absolute maximum in audio-visual stimulants" to show fires. The only thing that told Captain Peter Hamilton his wing was blowing off was a general caution light that could have indicated a number of things.

—Fuel lines and electrical cables along the wings of DC-8s should be separated and safeguarded separately and apart from the fuel tanks.

—"Vital flight safety information" should reach all Air Canada pilots. The airline should work to improve its internal communications.

REFUSED TO NIBBLE

NOTTINGHAM, England (UPI) — A mouse named Lady Tracey Joanne, winner of a contest to find Britain's top mouse, failed to open a new store because she was not hungry.

Lady Tracey was supposed to nibble through a white silk tape to open the new People's Dispensary for Sick Animals gift shop. When encouragement from 600 onlookers could not convince her to do the task, organizers settled for a pair of scissors.

Present Drug Laws Said Parallel To Unsuccessful Prohibition Era

By EDWIN ROSENTHAL

LONDON (Reuter) — Marijuana smoking will become as socially acceptable within 10 years as tobacco or alcohol, a small but growing number of scientists say.

These proponents of "pot" say present laws against soft drugs in most parts of the world are as unenforceable as the United States' ban on alcohol during the 1920-33 prohibition period.

But the great majority of scientists opposes pot. They maintain it often leads to the use of "killer" hard drugs such as heroin, opium and cocaine.

Soft and hard drugs have been used since ancient times, but not on the growing scale of the modern world. A Reuter world survey shows dozens of medical and legal studies are under way to determine whether marijuana can take its place alongside alcohol and tobacco as a socially-acceptable way to relax.

In Canada, for example, a royal commission is touring the country to determine future government drug policy. The commission reports increasing usage of drugs.

SHRUG OFF ALCOHOL

The Reuter survey shows the young generation is turning in greater numbers to pot and shrugging off alcohol as an affliction suffered by their parents.

One point is certain. If pot became legal, it would destroy lucrative worldwide trade by men who operate outside the law, the traffickers producers and peddlars.

Prof. John Kaplan, a criminal law expert at Stanford University in California, has forecast that pot-smoking will be legal in Britain within this decade. He said it would protect youngsters from being involved in the drug underworld.

Kaplan rejects the view that the majority of people who start on cannabis—the plant base of marijuana—turn eventually to hard drugs. "It is crazy logic to outlaw marijuana and accept alcohol and tobacco—which are more dangerous drugs," he says.

On the other hand, the United Nations World Health Organization, based in Geneva, believes pot can lead to drug dependence just as alcohol can produce alcoholics.

Dr. Dale Cameron, a U.S. member of W.H.O.'s drug dependence committee, reports that 75 per cent of America's heroin addicts admitted starting with marijuana.

Last summer, President Nixon reported a preliminary government study of pot showed it was a greater health hazard than many people suspected. But the National Institute of Mental Health, which is conducting the study, has not drawn any final conclusions.

Recently, a group appointed by Nixon to investigate the problem of individual violence found that the use of marijuana was increasing at "a staggering pace." It recommended marijuana be legalized, mainly because present laws against its consumption were ineffective.

The trend in most countries has been to erase or reduce penalties for soft drug users and increase the punishment for traffickers.

The South American republic of Colombia has ruled out pot smoking as a criminal offence. In Denmark, too, the personal use or possession of small quantities does not lead to automatic prosecution.

Peter Schioler, a Danish government consultant on drugs, says, "We are convinced that if we criminalize all the young people who use cannabis, we shall create bigger social problems than are created by its use."

NO PENALTIES SET

In many Asian countries, soft drugs are used extensively, often without any legal penalties. Singapore officials say that ganja, a local form of marijuana, is gaining popularity among the young despite a new government campaign against traffickers.

In Indonesia, the fine for casual pot smokers is only $12 but the government is preparing stiffer penalties to stem an influx of hippies to beautiful Bali Island.

Hong Kong, a centre for opium smokers, is too concerned about its hard drug problem to worry much about marijuana. But in Thailand, Malaysia and South Korea, soft drug laws are tougher than ever.

A public opinion poll in Australia last month showed 84 per cent of those questioned were against legalizing pot.

The French government makes no distinction between marijuana and hard drugs. An interior ministry spokesman said, "Marijuana is the first step toward heroin. Our attitude will not change."

In West Germany, a few voices in the academic and medical fields suggest legalization of marijuana. There are no penalties for its use in private, but the government is demanding stiff penalties for drug pushers, especially those selling to juveniles.

In Sweden, a first offender caught with pot rarely suffers more than a fine or probation.

Dutch officials estimate that about 70 per cent of teen-agers in The Netherlands have tried pot without serious consequences. Those arrested have received nominal fines. The country has launched its own investigation into the whole problem. Meanwhile, drugs of all kinds remain illegal.

Criticism Moderate Of Welfare Paper

By The Canadian Press

First reactions to the federal white paper on social welfare, tabled in the House of Commons Monday, showed moderate criticism of the government proposals but little objection to the principle of increased aid to low-income families and poor pensioners at the expense of the more affluent.

Manitoba's NDP Premier Ed Schreyer came closest to objecting to the principle of selective assistance.

He said the proposal to cut off family allowances to families earning more than $10,000 a year is difficult to argue with, "but getting away from the universal aspects of the program and moving to a means test will inevitably mean higher bureaucratic and administrative costs."

Most criticism was on the grounds that minimum old-age or family-allowance payments were not raised enough.

Jerome Diamond, director of the Jewish Family and Child Services in Toronto, said many old-age pensioners "will still be in terrible trouble."

$12,000 BETTER

He also said $12,000 would be a better cut-off level for family allowances than the proposed $10,000 a year.

Agnes C. Higgins, executive director of the Montreal Diet Dispensary, which gives nutrition and budget counselling to low-income families, said "at least they have reached a level of protection of health, if not a level for having a good time."

But Toronto's Dr. J. W. Frei, executive director of the Metropolitan Social Planning Council, said the new help for pensioners is still "below the level of subsistence."

Metro's social services commissioner, John Anderson, said welfare families "will be much better off," although he would have liked to see the allowances increased to the range of $20 to $50 a child.

City officials in Montreal declined comment until they had studied the white paper proposals.

Toronto social activist John Mooney said "nothing has changed and nothing will change until governments attack the sources of poverty."

OPPOSITION CRITICAL

Parliamentary Opposition spokesmen were predictably critical.

"Inadequate," said Progressive Conservative Leader Robert Stanfield. "We see here no effective broadening of the basis of security."

NDP spokesman Stanley Knowles said "a number of things" in the paper are good but condemned the move to eliminate the cost-of-living increase of two per cent a year in the basic old age pension, which is to be frozen at $80 a month.

He said this move is breaking faith with people who have paid into the Canada Pension Plan.

Speaking for the Creditistes, Charles-Eugene Dionne of Kamouraska welcomed improved aid for low income families and needy pensioners but said the main problem was lack of money, which could be overcome only through monetary reform.

Meter Patrol Chief Dies

Vaughan, who lived at 573 Broadway, joined the commissionaires in 1961, serving in the meter patrol most of the time since then.

He served with the Royal Canadian Army Signal Corps during the Second World War.

Funeral arrangements will be announced later by McCall Bros. Chapel.

Crash Kills 30

Most of the passengers were on their way to visit their families for the end of the Moslem New Year, the report said.

OK

says Mrs. A. McKinley of St. Lambert, Quebec.

We gave Mrs. McKinley an advanced pack of new lower phosphate Breeze, reformulated with substitute materials. Here's what she had to say about it:

"With Breeze I've always been satisfied with my nice clean wash. I've tried the new lower phosphate Breeze, and my clothes are just as clean as ever. And I always like to get the towel inside. Breeze is still my choice."

This is just the beginning. Lever research will continue to try to find ways to use substitute materials to lower phosphate levels while maintaining Breeze's high quality performance.

Pope Paul said Tuesday the bill legalizing divorce in Italy caused him "profound suffering" and damages the 1929 concordat governing relations between the Roman Catholic Church and state. Interrupting his activities in Australia, the Pope sent a message that deplored "the very grave damage which divorce brings to Italian families and especially to children." In Italy torchlight demonstrators danced for joy in the streets while opponents of divorce circulated petitions to put the new law up to a vote of the people.

Nine female liberationists tried for seven hours Tuesday to meet Helen Gurley Brown, editor of Cosmopolitan magazine, to demand $15,000 reparations for what they said was exploitation of women as sex objects. Mrs. Brown did not meet the women, detained in a lobby by 10 men, but sent them a statement saying she was in agreement with all aspects of equality for women.

Some of the demonstrators carried children and signs with advertisements and titles of articles from recent issues, such as: "This blonde doesn't come cheap," "Can a girl be a virgin in 1970 and still hold her head up?" and "Plain and fancy facts about orgasm."

Judge Charles Older issued an order to police Tuesday to pick up Ronald Hughes, missing defence lawyer for Leslie Van Houten, youngest of the four defendants in the Sharon Tate murder trial. Bell Telephone Rate Hike Authorized by Ottawa

By CARL MOLLINS

OTTAWA (CP) — Telephone charges go up Jan. 1 in Ontario, Quebec, Labrador and the Northwest Territories by monthly amounts that range from 15 cents in a small-town residence to 70 cents for business phones in some suburbs of Toronto and Montreal.

In addition, monthly rates for extras such as extension phones or push-button dials will advance five to 15 cents. The one-time rental charge for a colored phone will go up by 55 cents to $9.55.

Bell Canada has been authorized to raised the rates by the regulatory Canadian Transport Commission, which ruled Tuesday that Bell was entitled to slightly less additional revenue than the company had asked for in September hearings.

The increases will yield Bell an additional $22.5 million a year on the basis of business this year instead of the $30 million the Montreal-based company had sought.

A commission ruling 15 months ago authorized additional long-distance and service charges to produce about $27.5 million in 1969 terms.

AFFECTS SIX MILLION

Tuesday's decision by the federal regulatory agency affects users of more than six million Bell telephones in Central Canada, Labrador and the North.

Provincial governments regulate rates charged by Bell subsidiaries in the Atlantic provinces and parts of Northern Ontario and by provincially-owned companies in the four Western provinces.

The basic monthly charges affected and the increases approved vary among different-sized communities and between business and residential phones. Provincial sales taxes are added separately at a rate of five per cent in Ontario and eight per cent in Quebec.

The heaviest charges are levied against subscribers in some suburbs where the service is linked to the Toronto or Montreal exchanges.

In those suburbs, monthly rental rates will rise by 25 cents to $7.20 for private residential phones and by 70 cents to $19.15 for business use.

At the other end of the scale —in spots such as Armstrong, Ont., White River, Ont., Yamaska, Que., and Igloolik, N.W.T.,—residential rates go up by 15 cents to $3.60 a month and business charges by 20 cents to $5.80.

NEAR MIDDLE

Somewhere near the middle of the range, take a home in Sudbury or Chicoutimi with two telephones, both of them standard black instruments. With provincial taxes, the basic monthly charge exclusive of long-distance calls will rise to $6.83 from $6.51 in Sudbury and to $7.02 from $6.70 in Chicoutimi.

In the same places, a business with an extension phone, both black, will pay $13.49 instead of $12.97 a month for basic charges in Sudbury, $13.88 instead of $13.34 in Chicoutimi.

In bigger places and with more extras, charges will be higher—in smaller places and with fewer frills, less.

The increase approved for basic monthly charges is 3¾ per cent, rounded to the nearest nickel, compared with the 6¼-per-cent increase sought by Bell. For the extras, the commission approved the requested increase of 6¼ per cent.

Answering criticisms raised in the public hearings, the commission said in effect that approval of increased basic charges 15 months after Bell's application for higher basic rates had been turned down does not mean that a renewed application would be sanctioned so quickly in future.

BELL CHIDED

The commission also put on record a mild wrist-slap for Bell in connection with its purchasing and investment relations with Northern Electric Co., Bell's subsidiary.

But while it found that Bell may be paying more than necessary for supplies from Northern and getting less than it could from investments in the company, the commission authorized the rate increases.

The CTC said it would be watching such parent-subsidiary relations carefully in future.

Union Will Not Bring About 'New Church' Says Covenant

By B. J. ANDERSON

TORONTO (CP) — The outline of what churchmen ferm "the new manifestation of the Church"—not a "new church"—emerged today following a conference of Protestant theologians seeking to reconcile differences on questions of faith, order and liturgy.

It would be a church considerably changed from its parents. It would be born, as expressed in a proposed Covenant of Union, in the hope that "something new and better than anything we have known separately will begin to emerge in our common worship."

The covenant would be the basic founding document of a union of the Anglican Church of Canada, the United Church of Canada, the dominant non-Roman Catholic denominations in Canada, and a small, third group of sharply differing views, the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ).

The covenant is the core of a preliminary draft of a proposed Plan of Union adopted Friday night by the general commission on union. It will go before the courts of the involved churches in January for study—not for revision—and to the memberships at large for reaction. Under present plans of step-by-step consideration, a final decision cannot come before 1974.

RECOGNIZE FEAR

Taking cognizance of feelings of unease and fear of change, widespread among members of both the major churches since talks on union began in 1943, the draft of the covenant says:

"Congregations may employ in their worship the familiar words of the Book of Common Prayer of the Anglican Church of Canada, Christian Worship of the Christian Church (Disciples of Christ) or the service book of the United Church of Canada.

"They may draw upon the heritage of all branches of the church."

The general commission was formed after the Principles of Union were adopted in 1965 by the Anglicans and the United Church—acceptance of the idea of organic union. Three years in the drafting, the preliminary draft of the proposed plan consists at present of more than 40,000 words of reports by special commissions on such points as a declaration of faith and of doctrine. The covenant itself is about 7,500 words in length.

Nineteen names offered by members were put on a preferential ballot—one was "Soul Probe"—with the commission directed to choose as a suggestion one of the first five. It was decided Tuesday night as the meeting closed, a day ahead of schedule, to submit, without a recommendation, five names to the courts of the churches.

FIVE LISTED

In order of members' preference, with the number of points each obtained in the vote shown in parenthesis, they are:

—Church of Christ in Canada (71).

—The Church of Christ in Canada (65).

—United Christian Church in Canada (65).

—The United Episcopal Church in Canada (59).

—United Episcopal Church of Christ (in Canada) (57).

Members of the drafting committee urged acceptance of a name that would fit easily into a newspaper headline, such as CCC.

The prolonged negotiations on church union affect the spiritual well-being of more than six million Canadians—the number who declared Anglican or United Church affiliation in the 1961 census when individuals were required to state the church they attended.

Figures of actual membership and of adherents vary. Those generally accepted are 2,500,000 for the Anglican Church and 2,433,000 for the United Church.

Difficult questions of theology, important to ordained churchmen but of little interest to the laity as a whole, were resolved, usually with compromise.

Among them was baptism of infants. For this ceremonial a "laying on of hands"—one member asked sarcastically, "one or both?"—was proposed.

It finally was agreed that infants may be baptized, this to be followed in later years with a service of confirmation.

Ceremony now prevailing in all churches will be continued. The Disciples believe only in adult baptism, by immersion.

So does the Baptist Church which announced to the meeting its final decision that differences in belief and doctrine were so deep it could not join the proposed unin.

On faith, the Old and New Testaments are accepted as basic.

This was a major concession on the part of the Disciples who base their belief only on the New Testament.

A group of 5,000 members, they had their Canadian origins at a meeting in the early 1800s of "Scotch Baptists"—the Disciples avoid saying "Scottish Baptists"—near Charlottetown. They now have 10 congregations in the Maritimes, 30 in Ontario and seven in the West.

OPEN TO WOMEN

A major decision was that in the new church ordained ministries will be open to both men and women.

The Anglican Church at present has no ordained women priests. Women in its ministry within a decade was seen as a probability by some members.

"Presbyters" will replace "ministers" and "priests." Deacons, replacing the word "elder," will be ordained.

For the official in charge of finances and legal matters, "legal adviser," as proposed, was changed to "chancellor."

It was emphasized throughout that terminology was meaningless. At least in its beginnings, the proposed new church will closely resemble the old.

The United Church and the Disciples accepted bishops.

In the structure of the church organization, pastoral zones will be the local basis. Over them will come districts, each headed by a bishop, then regions and finally the national assembly.

CRUCIFIXION 'FEW HOURS AGO'

TORONTO (CP) — In terms of astral time, the Crucifixion occurred "only a few hours ago," a retired Anglican bishop said Tuesday, and the Christian church is only in its dawning.

Rt. Rev. S. C. Steer, former bishop of Saskatoon, now living in retirement in Victoria, said in an interview there "still is far more to be drawn from the Christian faith than we have yet fully realized."

One of the Anglican representatives on the general commission on church union, Bishop Steer—who once said that the most boring part about religion is going to church—said that in the current discussions on church union what is sought is not a blending of the traditions of the three involved churches but a new approach to the future.

"By looking more deeply at the Christian faith we hope to discern more clearly the resources which it has for the life of mankind today," he said.

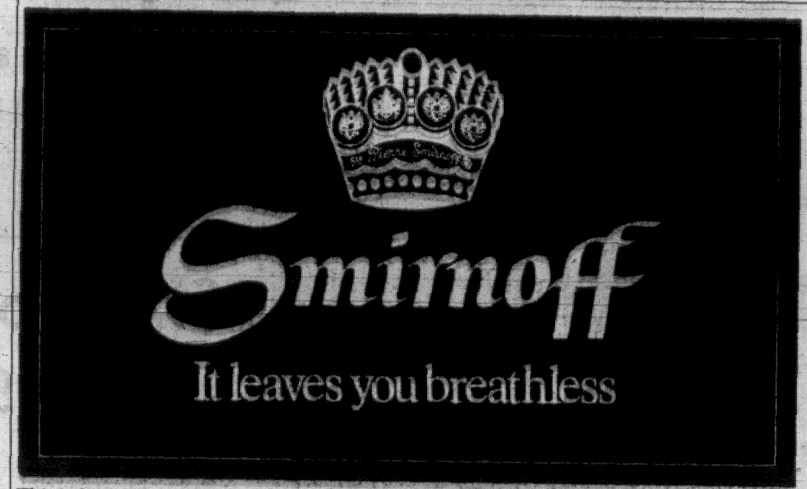

ALLENDE TAKES OVER BIG TEXTILE FACTORY

CONCEPCION (AP) — Marxist President Salvador Allende signed a decree Tuesday expropriating one of Chile's largest textile factories.

In announcing the first business expropriation made by his new administration, Allende warned any industrialists who exploit workers that "their days are numbered."

The expropriated textile factory, called Bellavista Tome, is near this industrial city, where Allende announced the government takeover.

He Creates 50,000 Quill Pens Annually

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (AP) — A newspaper called him a millionaire, around town they call him the goose man, but Lewish Glaser says he is a spokesman for the United States.

He says he is the only man in the U.S. who makes quill pens.

From before dawn to nightfall, seven days a week, the 71-year-old craftsman sits at a table in his walkup apartment-work shop and with 15 deft strokes with a fine-honed knife creates a quill pen every 30 seconds.

Glaser said it all started years back when he was raising geese and people kept asking for quill pens.

But it was not until he was invited to the White House in 1955 to give two of his quills to President Dwight D. Eisenhower that he really did the work as a business. Eisenhower suggested he start making more of the pens as a business and Glaser has been producing 50,000 quills annually ever since.

"I didn't think of any money in this enterprise. I thought I could be a spokesman of America, because I'm grateful of having been born here."

As for being a millionaire, Glaser says he doesn't have any money. He said he got an unfounded reputation for being rich while on a feather hunting trip to Watertown, Wis., where as a youth he worked on a farm.

He would not say how much money he has made selling quills, but prices range from two cents—for children who go up to see him in his shop, to a $10 gift set which includes a pewter inkwell.

AMONG PROBLEMS OF THE BRITISH-FRENCH JET

Carpet of Unearthly Noise 60 Miles Wide

By CLAIRE STERLING

ROME (WP) — The Concorde, flying at twice the speed of sound, lays down a carpet of unearthly noise 60 miles wide. Plaster falls from ceilings, windows break, cows abort, dogs keen, children howl in fear at the sound of its passing. In decibels, its sonic bang is four times more than the human ear can reasonably stand.

There is a lot more the matter with the Concorde. Apart from other British and French worries over their $1.8 billion prototype aircraft — reportedly it cannot land with a full load of passengers, fuel and cargo in hot places such as tropical Africa, Washington or Rome, nor can it carry such a full load back from the United States to Europe because of adverse wind patterns — it has been accused of possibly poisoning its passengers by radiation and ozone in the stratosphere.

Furthermore, it vomits water vapor, sulphur and soot at a windless altitude where such items may float around for two months before falling to the ground.

For all anybody can tell, this last could cause a permanent cloud-cover by the time — none too distant — when 500 supersonic routes are criss-crossing the planet, thus blotting out the sun and changing the planetary climate to God-knows-what calamitous effect on plants, animals and us.

Aviation week says it won't happen, but scientists gathered at a Williamstown conference have decided they simply didn't know enough to say, one way or the other.

Can't Overfly United States

Therefore, people like Sen. William Proxmire think it is exceptionally silly to waste money on "playthings for the Jet Set" like the Concorde or other supersonic transport models (SST).

Considering the stakes, though, Sen. Proxmire has his work cut out for him. The British-French Concorde is off the drawing boards, after all, The Russians' comparable Tupolev TU-144 is well along. So is the American Boeing 2707-300.

The United States now sells four out of every five aircraft bought in the non-Communist world. And the world market in this field is expected to be worth about $125 billion by 1990.

This is not quite the banal argument it might seem between a much put-upon populace and the fat cats of the aircraft industry. The SST are often maligned by what aviation week calls "anti-noise careerists:" Once aloft, and flying at subsonic speed, they will actually be quieter than the jets presently in service. Moreover, they are going to have to fly at subsonic speed over inhabited territory anyway.

For once, the human race has reared up to defend itself in advance against a potentially unbearable technological advance. It has weighed the social costs against the asserted advantages, and concluded that for all the joys of getting around the globe twice as fast as we do now, the sonic bang simply cannot be lived with.

The Concorde, not yet flying commercially, has already been forbidden to overfly the Unites States and many other countries, soon to include its own co-sponsor, Great Britain. Its flight routes, and those of all other supersonic carriers, will have to go over water and wasteland largely north of the Arctic Circle.

It Vomits Vapor Sulphur, Soot

True, there will still be the awful racket of takeoff and landing, two-and-a-half times worse than the jumbo jets. But in effect, the boom has been banned.

Much of the credit goes to the American government, whose anti-noise regulations have set the pace for the world. Yet some people abroad may find the pace a shade too brisk.

The Concorde, first of the SST to go into production, cannot get down to the permitted noise level at and near American airports, at last as it stands now. Neither could the Soviet TU-144.

But Boeing's supersonic model, five or six years behind the others, will be able to meet those standards. Any airline that can't, by the time the Boeing 2707-300 is out — might as well forget about the trans-Atlantic run — already traveled by six million air passengers a year, and growing.

It seems superfluous to wonder what that might do to future world orders for supersonic aircraft, and unfair in a way as well. As the late-starter, Boeing has naturally been able to improve on the pioneer work done for both the Concorde and TU-144. It also happens to be a late-starter in good part because of the American government's insistence that something would have to be done about the noise.

ANCIENT MALAYSIAN TRIBE PERFORMS MODERN CHORE

SIBU, Sarawak, Malaysia (AP) — A lot of water has flowed down the Rejang since the "wild men of Borneo" hunted heads, but a Communist rebellion in this jungle state is reviving other skills.

Government forces are using the Ibans, a tribe which still ceremonially feeds heads taken by their fathers, for tracking down guerrillas over the murky waters and tangled paths of Sarawak.

They are formed in unarmed border scoucruited widely and trained loosely.

About their only clue is that most terrorists are Chinese. Since the region is peppered with Chinese farmers and shop owners, some serious problems are developing. Guerrillas have killed Iban scouts, whetting appetites for revenge.

Ibans are also called Sea Dyaks. They live far inland, as opposed to the Land Dyaks, who paradoxically live along the sea.

The last time government forces called them to action was during the Japanese occupation. Heads still wearing round spectacles can be found along the Rejang River.

In the mid-1960s, when a Communist attempt at a coup failed in Indonesia, Ibans on that side of the border settled old scores. The casualties were estimated in the thousands.

As 35 per cent of Sarawak's one million inhabitants, Ibans are easily the dominant force among indigenous peoples. But an influx of Chinese and Malays complicates their status.

HEADS ADORN RAFTERS

They still live mainly in longhouses, rambling village units on stilts, along jungle streams. They eat rice and a few chickens.

Progress has brought a few changes. At Igan Tigarong, a few hours' paddle from this economic hub, women now wear tops. One warrior-aged man poses for pictures waving his parang or long knife at an old head trophy while carefully arranging his loincloth over an American-made swimming suit.

Heads decorate the rafters of many longhouses. If these are not fed regularly, custom dictates, they will eat occupants of the longhouse.

Head hunting was largely suppressed under the White Rajahs of the last century. Despite the brief revival in the Second World War, it has not figured in the counter-insurgency campaign.

Instead Iban scouts are asked to pinpoint suspected terrorists and report them to military units.

Apparently there are several hundred guerrillas. The government has painted them as "the people's enemy."

Young braves adorn themselves in hornbill feathers, ruefully ignoring the old rule that you have to take a head for every one of the white-banded plumes you wear.

ANOTHER LOOK

Learning to Love The Ladies on Ice

By Jack Scott

There comes a time, in writing these little pieces for the paper, when you must stand up like a man in full view—all five-foot-three—and eat some words. That time has come in my strange and melancholy affair with the lady curlers of the world, of whose scorn hell's fury hath no equal.

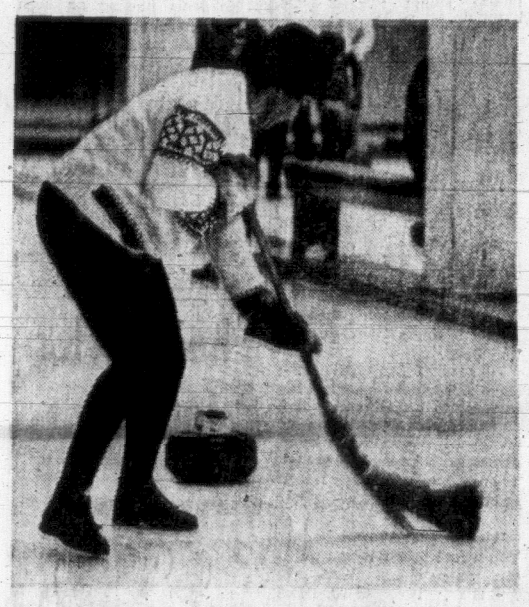

For some years, you see, I have been writing syndicated columns for weekly papers across the country. It was always like putting a note in a bottle and throwing it to the tides. The wildest heresies seemed not to disturb my distant readers. Then, emboldened by this apparent ennui or tacit agreement, I wrote my brief essay on lady curlers and the roof, so to speak, fell in.

★ ★ ★

I freely admit now that I hadn't done my usual homework. I had actually seen ladies' curling only once, at Winnipeg's famed Granite Club, and that was years ago. Still, the lasting impression, that the game was anti-feminine, anti-romance and anti-sex, was so vivid that I was able to build up what I fancied to be an overwhelming case against women on ice.

Last night, as I made my apprehensive way to the Victoria Curling Club, I was remembering all too clearly how my thesis developed.

If a woman-hater spent a lifetime trying to devise something that would show off females to the least possible advantage, I had said, this would be it. Was it not significant I asked, that the women of Europe, elegant, charming, alluring graceful women, wouldn't be found dead in a rink?

Would Brigitte Bardot or Vanessa Redgrave or Margot Fonteyn be seen in those funny, lumpy costumes and terrible tams, flushed with the exertion of "the roaring game?"

I was remembering, too, the incredible response to that piece, the resolutions passed by ladies' curling clubs from Alberni to Cote St. Luc, Que., the flood of angry letters to my editors, the half dozen cancelled subscriptions, the phone calls from lady curlers closer to home, threatening to do me all manner of indignity or injury.

So there I was, at the ladies' evening league of the Victoria Curling Club, and as I went through the door and mounted the stairs my first impression was that I either had the wrong place or the wrong time or both.

The foyer was crowded with men. They were all sitting there, facing the same way, silent and enormously contemplative. There is a hooded, introspective look peculiar to men who are watching women. I have seen it at the beach at Cannes, at Toronto's Victory Burlesque, at a thousand European sidewalk cafes — oh, all sorts of places. But what in the world could account for it here, of all places, in a Victoria curling rink?

My questing gaze followed theirs through an immense sheet of plate glass and there they were — the lady curlers, large as life, and I knew in a trice, whatever a trice may be, that I was in for some word eating.

What has happened, though I seem to have been the last man to discover it, may be described in two words: stretch pants. Stretch pants are made from an elasticized synthetic which has a truly spectacular adhesive effect. As the fabric for a curling costume it is ideal on two counts. One is that it keeps the lady curler warm. The other is that it makes the lady curler an altogether splendid sight to gaze upon.

As I joined the gentlemen watchers under glass in their highly strategic location aloft of the lady curlers, Gary Leibel, who is the club's assistant manager, took the seat next to mine and gave me a brief rundown on the progress of the game here.

"Besides our own club there's Esquimalt and Playland in Saanich and the Racquet Club, all with thriving ladies' leagues," Gary said. Together we gazed implacably through the glass. "It really got going here in the beginning because so many Victorians come from the prairies and many women curled in self-defence, you might say, since the game was so popular with men. Now all sorts of younger women are joining in and they're dedicated to the game."

★ ★ ★

"The . . . ah . . . the costume seems to have changed since I last looked," I said. We were watching a splendid lady curler making her delivery, a graceful glide on one knee, a position which she held like a ballet dancer as the rock went down the ice. We were not watching the rock.

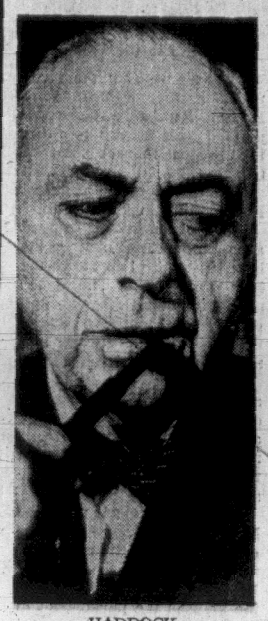

"Oh, yes, the costume," Gary said. "That's part of it, too. Before the stretch pants they had to wear all sorts of thick, bulky clothing. You might say that the stretch pants revolutionized the game."

"I would say that," I agreed.

At this point we were joined by Mrs. Flora Martin who, it turned out, has been four times the champion lady curler of Vancouver Island, a trim, blue-eyed figure in a gray blue and green cardigan and those pants. Happily enough, Mrs. Martin was not aware that she was in the company of The Man Who Hates Lady Curlers.

"Yes," said Mrs. Martin, "The sport is growing all the time. It's great fun, good for the figure, and wonderful for a competitive team effort. It really is a game with a new look."

"Oh, Mrs. Martin," said I, the new lover of lady curlers, "You are so very right."

HADDOCK
. . . good for morale

Plastic Wreaths To Stay

The plastic imitation holly wreaths adorning Victoria's cluster lamp standards will have to stay, Mayor Courtney Haddock said today.

Because the wreaths were bought by the Downtown Victoria Association, there is little the city can do to change the situation, Haddock said.

The mayor had expressed surprise Tuesday that the wreaths were used because he thought it was agreed they were "ugly."

He said he has been too busy to take time to examine them but hoped to do so sometime today.

'LIKE HOLDING GUN TO FELLOW'S HEAD'

By AB KENT

A proposal by Mayor Courtney Haddock to have Victoria businessmen pay for renovations to the city police "officers' mess" was described by an alderman today as "away out of line."

The proposal came to light when a businessman told the Times he was surprised and annoyed by the mayor's suggestion that he put up $200 for a new carpet and furnishings in the mess. Serving eight senior officers, the modest room is located on the top floor of the police station.

Another, who questioned the proposal that individuals subscribe to the refurbishing, said: "I was a little choked up when I first heard about it . . . it is like holding a gun to a fellow's head. We support the police in many ways and we certainly don't have to do this."

A third business operator, who hadn't heard of the proposal, refused to take it seriously when told about it. "You must be putting me on," he said.

●

Mayor Haddock, who is an honorary member of the mess and as mayor is chairman of Victoria police commission, said the mess membership is too small to "maintain a good mess," and that more honorary members were sought.

He said the "one-shot" subscription would indicate community support for the police department and be good for morale at a time when police in North America are coming under increasing criticism.

Alderman Clyde Savage thought businessmen are aware of the problems police have to face and are willing to co-operate in a number of ways.

"But asking them to subscribe financially is away out of line.

"If the work is necessary it should go through proper channels (the police commission and city council). I think this is embarrassing to businessmen," said Savage.

Ald. Hugh Ramsay was cautious when asked if he was aware of the proposal. He said he had not heard of it and wanted to question the mayor and Police Chief John Gregory.

"If the mayor is doing this, at least it's once removed from the police," Ramsay added.

Haddock said the police department is functioning in a bigger city and needs stability to help it promote orderliness. Giving the officers a better mess is "an ordinary procedure, good for morale that works down through the ranks," he said.

●

Among some members of the department there is a "depressed feeling," because salaries are not equal to others in the area. Some policemen do not earn enough to qualify for NHA mortgages, the mayor said.

"We want them to be completely incorruptible but they are coming under greater abuse. We've got to let the department know the public is behind them. They are a good department with an efficient chief," Haddock said.

The mayor did not explain how the plight of the ordinary policeman would be improved by refurbishing the officers' mess which has only eight members.

A number of citizens are already honorary members of the police officers' mess, which serves as a lounge during coffee breaks and rest periods and for social functions when liquor is sometimes served.

It was created when the police building underwent complete renovation five years ago, and was furnished with a tile floor and utilitarian furniture.

●

He said he had contributed $100 to the refurnishing and that the normal honorary membership fee is $10 a year.

A spokesman for Woods Contract Sales Division said the store has a contract to furnish the police officers' mess.

The mayor questioned the fact that the subscription plan was being criticized.

"Is somebody trying to make something of it? There's always someone who wants to make something out of things."

Moon Rock Display Set For Victoria This Month

The lunar sample recovered from the moon by U.S. astronats will be on display in the Provincial Museum for five days starting Dec. 16.

The rock is on a tour of Canada but will only be shown in Victoria in British Columbia, Wilma Wood, educational officer, said today.

"We applied to have it shown here a year ago," she said. "The interest we took in having the rock exhibited here is the main reason it is being sent to Victoria."

Organizers of the rock tour are the National Museum of Science and Technology, the U.S. information service and NASA. It will be exhibited in other provinces.

It will be displayed in the museum's foyer and on view between the hours of 10 a.m. and 4:30 p.m.

VICTORIA DRIVER KILLED

The driver of the truck has been charged with manslaughter.

Winder was alone in his car at the time of the accident, just after noon.

An installer with the Canadian Telephone and Supply Co., at the time of the accident, Winder was on loan to the B.C. Telephone Co. and working on a project at Nelson.

Educated in Oak Bay schools, he was to have married Bonnie Draper of Vernon Dec. 12.

★ ★ ★

He is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Glen R. Winder, 927 Redfern, and paternal grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. John Winder of Calgary.

Funeral services will be held at 3 p.m. Monday in McCall's Chapel, to be followed by internment at Royal Oak Burial Park.

KILLER DOGS ON PROWL

Special Sheep Area Urged

Metchosin farmer G. H. Mitchell of Sea Bluff Farm has called on Agriculture Minister Cyril Shelford to designate a special sheep protection area to stop flocks being molested by prowling dogs.

His application is accompanied by a petition signed by 90 sheep owners between View Royal and Otter Point.

Mitchell says that in two years 307 sheep from a total of 1,185 had been lost to dogs. This, says Mitchell, represents a yearly percentage loss of more than 12 per cent. In addition to the fatalities, many other sheep had been injured.

Average flocks in the area, says Mitchell, are about 17 head, but owners would increase their flocks if menace from dogs was cut down. Other sheep owners, he added, had gone out of business because of dogs.

"If dogs were better controlled the sheep population would probably expand again as sheep do well here and it is the traditional economic use of land here."

Mitchell also backed up his submission with a petition signed by 98 people — not sheep owners — living in the residential areas of Albert Head, Glen Lake and Happy Valley. All asked for better control of dogs, even if it meant an increase of dog tax.

Mitchell pointed out that an order-in-council was in effect from 1940 to 1959, creating a Metchosin-Sooke sheep protection area. He suggested this could be re-imposed with provision for proper enforcement.

CANDIDATE MEETINGS NEXT WEEK

Four all-candidate public meetings have been arranged next week for the Dec. 12 Saanich municipal elections.

They are:

Monday 7:30 p.m., Mount Douglas School; Tuesday 7:30 p.m., Prospect Lake Community Hall; Wednesday 7:30 p.m., Mount View School; Thursday 7:30 p.m., Reynolds School.

Six men are seeking the four aldermanic vacancies. The meetings were arranged by the Saanich Action Committee.

Arthur Mayse . . .

BACK WHEN HE SERVED with the RCMP, David Beeching was chiefly occupied with man's inhumanity to man. These years as SPCA branch manager for Victoria, he works to ease the tribulations imposed by man on the creatures with which he shares this planet.

"How do you care for a sick iguana?" Dave asked when we talked this week. "We got hit with that one not so long ago."

The question is rhetorical, since the iguana proved to be past saving. But the neurotic squirrel monkey that turned up one day at the shelter was luckier.

The monk had lost all his frisk and frolic. Curled in a ball at the back of his cage, he showed no interest in living. He wouldn't eat, he wouldn't play, and friendly overtures brought no response.

"He was suffering from the stress that can overtake a tribal animal separated from his kind," Dave explained. "But we found a cure for that."

They are novel, they are different, and many of those who buy them do so on impulse. Problems arise. The exotics require special care and feeding. All too often, it's only a matter of time before their owners get tired of the fuss and bother such pets impose.

Then, like the stress-afflicted little creature for which Dave Beeching found a cure, they may become SPCA charges.

Here's a partial list of exotics turned over to Vancouver SPCA in the last few months.

Three coati-mundis (tree-dwellers that look somewhat like long-tailed, long-nosed racoons); two ocelots, one iguana, one parrot; and 15 monkeys of various species.

"What it amounts to," says Dave, "is a slave trade in immature animals. The death-rate is terrific, and the drain on some species is so heavy that they've been placed on the endangered list."

British Columbia SPCA units have asked for a meeting with provincial authorities to discuss this matter of exotics. They hope the government will see fit to prohibit the importation of many species except under special licence.

★

The SPCA branches have also asked government to outlaw the leg-hold beaver trap in favor of the Conibear trap — invented by Frank Conibear of Victoria — which kills almost instantly.

But even the widely-used Conibear trap is held to be less than perfect, and this fact is a matter of concern to the Canadian Federation of Humane Societies.

"A lot of people think of trapping as a thing of the past," Dave Beeching told me, "but the fact is that three to five million pelts are taken in Canada each year. It would be unfair to call the trapper cruel, but trapping is, and the federation hopes to make it less so."

With that in mind, a search for the perfect trap was begun about a year ago by a Federation-appointed committee.

Some of the backing for this endeavor comes from the Hudson's Bay Company—oldest trapper in the field through a $4,000 research grant.

Backing has also been supplied by the B.C. government: a $2500 grant, boosted by a percentage of the royalties levelled on each pelt.

Its probable that even the perfect trap, if it arrives upon the scene, won't represent the perfect answer to those who wish the fur trade out of existence.

But if kill 'em we must, at least let it be done swiftly. And who's to say that the wild burfearers' fate isn't better than that of many a disowned and unclaimed pet which ends its days in a pound?

A staircase similar in design to this one in Bastion Square now links the Rideau Canal with Ottawa's Confederation Square. The Ottawa staircase was the first project undertaken for the National Capital Commission by former Victoria architect Rod Clack, who designed Baston Square and Centennial Square.

Rod Clack to Re-Design Historic Ottawa Market

By PEGGY MIKA
(Special to the Times)

OTTAWA — Can the ideas used in the restoration of Bastion Square be transplanted successfully to bring to life the market area of Ottawa?

Former Victoria architect Rod Clack thinks they can.

He has been invited to head a committee appointed by the board of control to study the By Ward Market and if the plan just submitted is accepted this very popular part of the capital will spring into new being.

Rod Clack was the city architect in Victoria and designed Centennial Square and Bastion Square. He is now the chief architect with the National Capital Commission.

His first project with the NCC was to design a staircase from the Rideau Canal to Confederation Square, and he used a design similar to the stair in the parking lot in Baston Square.

Clack says there are several similarities between the Baston Square project and the By Ward Market proposal.

Both Bastion Square and the By Ward area—named after Col. By who founded Ottawa—are in the oldest parts of the cities.

By Ward Market is in the lower town and has served as a market area for more than a century. Many of the families presently selling their produce there can trace family association with the market at least a hundred years.

Access is difficult and parking even more so. Cars and trucks wander all through the area, destroying the atmosphere of a market place.

As in Victoria, there is a great deal of sentiment and strong feeling involved. People are afraid the essential heart of the market will be destroyed by any changes.

But as Clack says, the area has marvellous possibilities as a place for people.

At present there are a number of buildings but one in particular is the centre of controversy.

It is the main building and has been condemned as a fire and safety hazard, and needs extensive renovation or replacement.

It houses permanent stores such as delicatessen, fruit and vegetable stores and meat markets.

The district farmers set up their stalls each morning on the sidewalk. Here from spring to fall the Ottawa housewife can buy fresh-picked fruit and vegetables.

All summer the stands are piled high with all the ingredients for salads. In the fall the stalls are garlanded with Indian corn, bittersweet and garlic with the stems braided.

Children are brought here by their teachers to see the produce from the farms. For city-born children this is often their only chance to see it without the plastic wrap.

In LaPointes they can see fish from across Canada and around the world. They can see shellfish and lobster and gaze in awe at a whole sturgeon.

They can go into the import shops and see the stuff dreams are made of—Kiwi fruit from New Zealand, teas from the orient and avocadoes and mangoes from the tropics.

As Rod Clack sees it, the area should be blocked off from through traffic as lower View Street was to form a pedestrian mall. More off-street parking would be provided as was done in Bastion Square.

The market building would be replaced to provide better all-weather facilities for the stalls and stores. The stores on Rideau Street would be gradually tied in to make a total shopping complex.

The cost? Clack says it is a bargain at $500,000, about double the cost of the Bastion Square project.

He feels turning an area back to the people is surely worth that much.

DEAR ABBY . . .

Grew Up Neat

By ABIGAIL VAN BUREN

DEAR ABBY: I have been married to a terrible housekeeper for 30 years and she thinks I'm happy because I love her. But no one can be happy with a slob but another slob. I've never been able to bring my friends home and I know that our children were also ashamed of the way our house looked. The daughters are married now and they are both very good housekeepers. How do you suppose that happened? Slob's-Husband.

DEAR HUSBAND: First things first. You are not only 30 years too late with your complaing, but you're directing it to the wrong person. A husband doesn't have to hit his wife over the head with a broom to let her know the place needs a sweeping. Your daughters obviously retarded their mother's housekeeping as a "horrible example," and determined not to follow suit. Sometimes it works that way.

DEAR ABBY: My husband had a heart attack and it took him several months to recuperate. Naturally, during that time I had everything to do inside and outside our home. (Don't get me wrong, I'm not complaining. I was glad to do it.)

Whenever I would run into friends while shopping, they would all ask, "How is John feeling?" But not one person asked, "How are you feeling, Marge?"

A wife also goes through a great deal of agony when her husband is sick, and it would be nice for people to realize this and for one of them to ask, "How are you getting along?" In Need of Sympathy.

DEAR MARGE: How are you getting along?

DEAR ABBY: A wife asked you what you thought of a husband who got up at four in the morning and took off for a long-anticipated hunting trip, and forgot his gun! You replied, "I think whatever it was he intended to hunt, he didn't intend to shoot."

I am surprised at you, Abby. I am sure you must realize that many athletes get pre-game jitters. My brother-in-law was a football player and he used to get diarrhea and throw up before every game. In high school, a member of our boxing team appeared in the gym in his warm-up jacket and a jock strap. He forgot his trunks. Even some of the more experienced entertainers will tell you they still get stage fright. Their stomachs are tied up in knots, and their hearts pound like a trip hammer.

Some expectant fathers, when the baby is due, have been known to start out for the hospital without their wives. Hunters are no different? Be fair, Abby, and print this. — Hunter's Wife.

DEAR ABBY: Why does every wedding announcement start out with, "Daughter of Banker Weds?" or, "Movie Executive's Daughter Marries?" Are they really announcing a nuptial or trying to promote the old man's business? — Geo., Leo and Fred.

DEAR G.L. AND F.: Papa's business adds a little interest to an otherwise dull announcement. "Daughter of Oil Tycoon Weds Parking Lot Attendant" says more than "Nancy Smith and Joe Doaks Exchange Vows."

What's your problem? You'll feel better if you get it off your chest. Write to ABBY, Box 69700, Los Angeles, Calif 90069. For a personal reply enclose stamped, addressed envelope.

Job's Daughters Anniversary Ball

Job's Daughters will celebrate the 50th anniversary of the founding of their Order with a dance in the ballroom of the Empress Hotel Saturday.

Invitations have been sent to the 200 active members in Victoria and to the members of Bethels in other Vancouver Island areas and in Vancouver. There are more than 50 Bethels in B.C.

The first Victoria Bethel was founded Dec. 4, 1934. Members must be related to a Mason in order to join.

Glamorous Washington
Frustrating for Graduates

By ANN BLACKMAN

WASHINGTON (AP) — Julie graduated from a prominent woman's college last year and set out for Washington to work for a well-known congressman. "Valuable experience," she thought.

Now, with a year of answering mail and cranking a mimeograph machine for $110 a week behind her, Julie is quitting.

Every year Julies by the hundred flock to Washington — bright, serious young girls with new college degrees in hand and visions of glamour and excitement in their eyes.

"These girls come to me with political science degrees and they think they have the world by the tail," says Hazel Bergstrom, chief of the Capitol Hill Employment Centre.

"But the colleges don't prepare them to do anything. They come here thinking they're going to change policy decisions and find Prince Charming. Soon they're disenchanted and discouraged."

The proglem, says Mrs. Bergstrom, is that congressmen and senators need foot soldiers, not staff officers.

Another single working girl said: "The government brochures paint a pretty picture, but when many girls get here, they find they're not paid enough to live or their jobs are not satisfying."

Still, says 25-year-old Hortence Mena, whose nickname is Hank, "Sometimes the only way to get a job is to start as a clerk or a secretary."

That's just what she did in 1967, going to work for Texas Democratic Congressman Henry B. Gonzales, who represented her hometown district of San Antonio. Since then Miss Mena has started law school and has been promoted to Representative Gonzalez's legislative assistant.

Still, her story is rare in a town where more dreams are broken than realized.

Not even Mrs. Bergstrom, whose job is finding work for these eager young women, thinks the possible rewards are worth the chance.

"Definitely not," she said when asked if she would recommend a Washington job to her daughter.

SOCIAL LIFE GREAT

Life apart from the working conditions of Capitol Hill doesn't always make a girl's existence in Washington easier. Salaries often barely climb above $6,000 a year.

Then why do so many of the girls stay?

Not all find their work and life distasteful. "I'm here for the fun, fling-type experience you could never find in another city," says a secretary to a state department official.

"Life here is plesant," she says. "I can ride my bike to work. I live in a house in Georgetown with some other girls and pick figs from my bedroom window. Life here isn't a hassle."

Then Julie, whose pretty face is framed by long dark hair, smiled. "I suppose you ought to mention my social life. It's the best I ever had."

But as typical as Julie's frustration over her work is, her pleasure with her social life seems out of the mainstream of many more girls' Washington existence.

Tests Show Small Cigars Hold More Risk of Cancer

By ANTHONY TUCKER
The Manchester Guardian

LONDON — The smoke residue from small cigars has been shown in animal tests to be a more active cancer-producing agent than similar residue from cigaretters, according to London's Tobacco Research Council.

Smoke residue or condensate is believed to contain the principal cancer-producing element of tobacco. The tests involved painting the smoke condensate on to the skins of mice.

Laboratory tests also show no difference in the cancer producing effects of cigarettes with and without acetate filters, the council reports in a review of activities from 1967 to 1969.

Results of skin tests also showed that the addition of copper, potassium, and sodium nitrate to ordinary flue-cured tobacco cigarettes reduces their cancer producing effect. Cigarettes made from reconstituted tobacco sheet also have reduced effect.

In many ways the report, which covers work costing $6 million is negative. Although it is believed that the active cancer-inducing agent is in one fraction of the condensate which altogether comprises only 0.2 per cent of the tar bulk, the causative agent or agents have not been identified.

Conditions equivalent to human smoking can be reproduced reliably but, in experiments carried out by the Imperial Cancer Fund, no case of lung cancer has yet been produced in either mice or rats.

A substantial part of the council's reasearch is in human studies. Work at Bristol University, supported by the council, showed that there was no basis for the suggestion that chronic bronchitis predisposes people to lung cancer.

GIFTED RESIDENT MUSICIANS, Catherine Young, soprano, and Winifred Scott, pianist, will be heard in a lieder recital Friday at Craigdarroch Castle. Stratford Festival Bosses Urged to Step from Posts

STRATFORD, Ont. (CP) — Tom Patterson, founder of the Stratford Festival, this week called for the resignations of William T. Wylie, general manager of the festival, and Dr. Ian Lindsay, president of the board of governors.

Mr. Patterson, who resigned from the festival last year, made his appeal for the resignations in the final statement of his speech at the festival's annual meeting.

"May I appeal to the general manager and to the president of the festival . . . for your sakes, for Stratford's sake, . . . for God's sake, resign," Mr. Patterson said.

Mr. Patterson outlined what he termed the "unhappy state" of the Stratford theatre organization.

BLAMES ATTITUDE

He said much of the blame lies with "the commercial attitude which seems to have taken over."

"The idea that we can dispose of the philosophy which created this miracle and replace it with a standard mediocre semi-commercial regional theatre approach is wrong."

Dr. Lindsay, who was not available later for comment on the request for his resignation, said at the meeting he had to agree with much of Mr. Patterson's speech.

"Those of us who are involved in the administration of the festival may have been so preoccupied with the mechanics of organization and growth that we have neglected to maintain communication with the local people."

Dr. Lindsay said, however, that "we cannot keep it (the theatre) as a museum; we must go on."

'Onus on the Parent' Law Successful

MADISON HEIGHTS, Mich. (AP) — Ten months ago, this Detroit suburb of 35,000 enacted an ordinance making parents responsible for crimes committed by their children.

It seems to be working.

So far no father or mother has been prosecuted, but police have sent 35 first-time warnings to parents of young offenders—and not one of these juveniles has been in trouble with the law since.

"It's our ace in the hole," said Lieut. Frank Rutecki of the youth bureau. "We use it for psychological effect."

Its ordinance stipulates that parents of a child under 17 who violates city, state or traffic laws can be held criminally liable for a $500 fine and 90 days in jail.

For the first two offences, parents and children receive warnings. A third offence can bring both parental fine and sentence.

'OTHERS RUINED MY LINES . . .'

Writer Turns to Film Direction

By BOB THOMAS

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — Mel Brooks is one of the most successful comedy writers in the United States, co-creator of the television series Get Smart, and a comic in his own right—see the late-night talk shows or hear his album, The 2,000-year-old Man.

So why would he want to direct a film?

"Because all through my career, I have sat by and suffered while others ruined my lines," he explained.

"Back in the days when I was writing Sid Caesar's television show, I sat in the control booth and saw the director push the wrong button, cutting the shot away from Sid just as he said the punch line. Finally I began writing the camera directions so that wouldn't happen again."

Brooks turned film director two years ago. He wrote and directed The Producer starring Zero Mostel, and his screenplay won an Oscar as best original script.

Now he has written and directed another audacious comedy, The Twelve Chairs, based on a Russian novel. It was filmed in Yugoslavia with Ron Moody, Fagin of Oliver; Frank Langella, Broadway actor who plays the rake in Dairy of a Mad Housewife; and television comic Dom DeLuise.

TELLS IF SEARCH

The Producer concerned a Broadway promoter with a musical about Hitler. The Twelve Chairs tells of three misfits in Russia in search of hidden jewels. Not exactly sure-fire material, according to the yardsticks of today's movie bosses.

"You go to any film company with these two projects and you'd be thrown out on your ear," Brooks observed. "But if you went to them and said you had a story about a fat lady in Warsaw with a pain in her left kidney and you've got Elizabeth Taylor to star and can make the picture for $300,000—they'd say, "You've got a deal."

"All the companies care about nowadays is the 'package.' If the 'package' is attractive to them, they'll buy it."

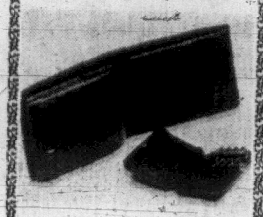

Fortunately, Brooks found a willing backer for his two projects, producer Sidney Glazier. When Brooks outlined the idea for The Producer, Glazier fell down laughing and agreed to sponsor the film. It was shot for $941,000 and so far has brought back $5 million, with the European market still to come.

The Twelve Chairs, even with the extensive location in Yugoslavia, cost a bargain $1.5 million. Savings could be realized because of Brooks's do-it-yourself habits.

VOTE ALLEN IN OAK BAY

In responding to friends' requests to run as alderman, I respectfully solicit the voters' support. Eight years in Victoria following lifetime promotion of people's interests in B.C. Same sincere, informed attention to public welfare. I will promote a GOOD NEIGHBOUR POLICY in and beyond Oak Bay. Support for Oceanographic Institute here. Better management of our sea, land, and air environment. Amalgamation seems inevitable. The sooner these are done, the less costly it will be. Residents should have priority in civic planning. I will promote more home, hospital and chronic services, fair play in welfare cases, and social conscience in action. Support this good neighbour policy.

(Inserted by the Allen for Alderman Committee.)

MATE-SWAPPING ISN'T NEW, BUT . . .

. . . IT'S BECOMING INCREASINGLY OPEN

Swingers and the Sexual Revolution, Victoria Style

By STEVE HUME

"Read, 'Swingers and The Sexual Revolution' in Nov. 9 Victoria Times. There are a number of friendly and congenial swingers in Victoria. If the article interests you, write Victoria Press, Box 250."

The classified ad, buried in the small, drab messages of the personals column, was flanked on one side by a plea from a lonely widow, on the other by a direction for abortion counselling.

It was a little tame by comparison with the deliberately outrageous come-ons of the underground press, but the implication was clear — there were active swingers in Victoria and they felt secure enough to try and recruit new members.

Swinging can be defined as casual sexual encounters, often with relative strangers as partners. It sometimes involves single individuals, but in most cases it is a subtle term for wife-swapping.

•

There is nothing new about wife-swapping. Among the Canadian Eskimos, for example, it is a traditional method of sealing a business partnership.

And it is an increasingly open activity among the wealthy middle class of North American society.

A carefully-worded letter, a brief telephone conversation and a promise of anonymity, and the Times had an interview with a Victoria couple that is vigorously, and happily, engaged in the practice of wife-swapping.

The meeting, arranged for the early afternoon, took place at the small but prosperous business they own and operate for themselves in the downtown area of Victoria.

Cloistered in a small back office with hot coffee and a tape recorder, and the background hum of traffic, the man and his wife gave a brief background of themselves before embarking on a free-ranging discussion of the philosophy and practice of swinging.

•

Articulate and soft-spoken, the man explained that both were 35 years old, that it was a second marriage for both and that they had been together for six years. He said he voted Conservative federally and for Bennett in B.C.

His wife explained that she would have to leave after an hour or so because her children would be coming home from school.

Both looked like the kind of respectable middle-class people who a few years ago would have been horrified at the thought that wife-swapping could be a growing practice in Victoria.

Times: At what point did you begin swinging?

•

Man: About a year-and-a-half ago. We thought about it for a long time but we didn't know how to go about starting. For us it's a little different than in a lot of cases where one person wants to swing but has to talk the other into it. Both of us always thought it was a good idea. After we came out here we answered an ad in the paper and through it we got to know people who introduced us to others.

Times: How many couples that you're aware of, are swinging in the Victoria area?

Woman: Oh, I guess about 25 or 30 couples that we know.

Times: Specify exactly what's involved in swinging. What does swinging mean to you? What's your definition?

Man: It's a subtle term for wife-swapping, I guess. Yet it's not really wife-swapping because it's with mutual consent. It varies so much with different people. We've been to all different kinds of parties. Sometimes you go to different rooms, sometimes you all stay in the living room, sometimes you all go to one bedroom — it depends on the spontaneity of the party.

•

Times: Who are the swingers in Victoria? Who do you swing with?

Man: Well, when we first started, if we met anybody that didn't completely turn us off we would swing with them. Now we're both pretty selective. We swing mostly with people in the 24-40 age group and they're mostly self-employed.

Woman: It's not just physical attraction. It's people that you have something in common with, other than swinging. You meet some real nice people, but the fellow who drives a truck or something, well, we don't exactly have anything in common with him. We swing with people in our own wage-bracket. People who are interested in the same things we're interested in — if we hear of a couple that plays bridge we're more interested. But not beer parlor types. We have no time for truck drivers and pub crawlers.

MAN: Sometimes you go to different rooms, sometimes you all stay in one room . . .

Times: You could be in a sensitive position if any unscrupulous person had knowledge of your sexual activities and tried to take advantage. Do you ever worry that you might be socially vulnerable?

Man: We don't have to worrry because being self-employed it doesn't matter to us. Some of the people do because being employed by the government and the police force it would probably be frowned upon. We mind our own business, no one knows what we do. We're less discreet than a lot of people because all we're interested in is protecting our children until they're old enough to know what it's all about.

•

Woman: We feel it's a lot more honest approach the way we conduct ourselves than a lot of the so-called upright citizens that we know who are downright sneaky, and below board. For some people swinging is right, for others it is wrong. We don't condemn any square couples for their values. Swinging isn't for everybody, neither is tennis or golf. We consider it a hobby and nothing else. We don't try to convert anybody, but if anybody is interested we'll explain our philosophy and if they want to give it a try, terrific. We realize what we do is frowned upon by society but it doesn't bother us a bit.

•

Times: While swinging tends to be a rather deviant and avant-garde behavior pattern, you are married, which is rather status-quo and conservative.

Man: We would still have gotten married, knowing then what we know now, rather than just living together. I don't think swinging really has that much to do with your marriage actually. I mean, we have our own life and family and everything — this is just a hobby.

Woman: Compare it to a hobby — can you think of a better hobby?

Man: It sure beats hell out of bowling and curling.

Times: What about the concept of marriage as a social mechanism for determining rights of sexual access?

Woman: It was designed that way but it has failed miserably throughout the years. We don't know many couples that are happily married. We feel we are happily married. We're less inhibited with each other now. We feel our sex life is entirely different. We feel much more free. There are no more hidden little secrets or fears. We're just a lot more honest with each other, not just sexually, in every aspect of life. We're completely happy. We've got the best there is. What we do with other people, well this is fun, but what we do together, this is a very precious thing. Sex with love is better, but sex without is a lot of fun.

Times: Let's try and get at a little more of the philosophy behind this. What led you to this kind of activity?

Man: I think it's something everybody would like to do. We just happened to agree that it was a good idea.

•

Woman: With us it's mutual. With most square couples one or the other is sneaking out to do it. We just don't happen to believe in this forsaking-all-others jazz, that's all.

Times: What do you see for society as a whole in terms of this kind of sexual behavior? A shift from individual behavior patterns to collective patterns? Communal marriages? Group sex?

Man: There's no emotional involvement here. Very few of the people you swing with are actually friends. Some swingers like to promote this kind of group living and would like, sometime in the vague future, to go into this sort of thing. But our own tastes are definitely against this sort of thing. We like privacy. We have no interest in this at all. I don't think that kind of thing can work — these communes seem to fail miserably after a short period of time.

WOMAN: Not beer parlor types. We have no time for truck drivers and pub crawlers

Times: You seem to feel there's a dissociation between love and sex. That they are not necessarily integrated.

Man: That's the basis of the whole thing. If you see an attractive girl and take her out and make love to her that doesn't mean you're emotionally involved with her. You can have a grand time and it doesn't mean a thing.

Woman: It's not new, it's just out in the open all of a sudden. Previously it was just for professional and high-income people — now the middle class is participating.

Times: What about the swinging scene in Vancouver, is it much more extensive?

Man: We went to a dance over there and there were 200 couples.

Times: Have you had much response to the ad you ran?

•

Man: Well, it was poorly worded. Single fellows have been responding, too. We've had about 55 replies, I would say, and 50 of them were gleeks. We got about five replies from couples we didn't know already. We've run this ad before, about a year ago. We just run it in case there are some couples that have just moved out from the East. If we meet anyone we get along well with we introduce them to others.

Times: They have swingers clubs and bars in California. What about something like that in Victoria?

Man: Not here. I'm enough of an organizer that I suppose if we were in a bigger city I'd have a crack at it — it's gone big in Los Angeles. This would be lovely. I'd like to have something like that but I don't see it in the foreseeable future.

Times: What about single swingers?

Man: There are hundreds of single guys around, there must be hundreds of single girls around that are interested in something like this but it's difficult to contact them. They don't answer ads. The guys, they all answer the ads. But 95 per cent of these guys, if they had a wife, wouldn't let her swing. It makes you so mad!

Woman: We have no time for this type of person because all he is doing is put you on a lower plane. And single women in our age group are generally looking for a husband. This is not the place to look for a husband.

CHILD MOBSTERS HOLD REIGN OF TERROR

BIRMINGHAM, England (AP) — Some youngsters reported to be eight years old or under have started a reign of terror in the All Saints area of this industrial city.

Councillor John Ruck asked Tuesday for a full-scale inquiry into the group, which has burned down a Boy Scouts headquarters, stoned one scout, heaved bricks and stones at old people's homes and terrorized shopkeepers.

Chinese Jade-Tree Provides Beauty

By HILDA BEASTALL

House plant collectors will have a number of their favorites blooming during December, with some obligingly keeping up the show until after the New Year celebrations. One that attracts a great deal of notice is Crassula argentea, the Chinese jade-tree.

Hilda

The thick, dark green succulent leaves and characteristic compact tree-like branching is well known but it is when clusters of buds begin to appear at the tips of the branches that the real show begins.

Usually it is towards the end of October we notice them. At first perhaps only two branch tips show buds but as the weeks pass, a good scattering of bloom will develop.

Now the first flowers are open. How exquisite they are, half-inch wide sharply-pointed stars of palest pink, each with a jewel for its centre. A single cluster may have 15 flowers.

If you have this plant in bloom, give yourself and your friends the pleasure of examining it with a reading glass.

Any kind of magnifying lens will do to bring out their intricate beauty.

This crassula need not be of great age to reach flowering size. A three-year-old from a five-inch cutting will flower if summer conditions are right.

Keep the plants in the smallest pots which will hold the rootball. A high summer temperature helps; even putting the pot into garden soil from June until September so long as the plant gets plenty of sunchine. Watering should be moderate at all times since stems and leaves are succulent water storers.

A close relative is the prostrate jade, Crassula lactea, whose milk-white flowers are now coming out in showy six-inch-long cones.

Basically the flowers are the same as those of Chinese-jade, but are sparkling white and many more to the one cluster.

Instead of an upright tree-like growth, this crassula spreads sideways over the pot, its thick grey-green leaves tightly massed along the prostrate stems.

This too likes plenty of sun and high summer temperatures, for most of the crassulas come to us from the warmth of South Africa. Direct light, sun whenever possible, heat in summer, and a tapering down of watering as our daylight gets less intense, are basic requirements for these succulent plants.

In sandy gardens of southern California, these are garden plants. The Jade-tree will reach 10 feet. But here they must be indoors well before the nights get cool in September.

KARPIN ON BRIDGE

By FRED L. KARPIN

In this deal, an expert East defender was partnered by an inexpert West defender. Each of them committed a mistake. In my opinion, the greater share of the blame should be placed on East's shoulders, because he was an expert and should have known better. What was East's error?

Both sides vulnerable. East deals.

Opening lead: King of ◇.

On West's opening lead of the diamond king, East followed suit with the deuce. West now continued with the diamond queen, which South ruffed. The ace and queen of trumps then picked up the adversely held trumps.

When declarer next played the ace of hearts, East failed to follow suit. It now became a routine matter to finesse against West's jack of hearts, and to bring home six heart tricks. On two of South's hearts, dummy's two spades were discarded. In time, South ruffed his losing spade in dummy; and this fulfilled the doubled slam contract—thanks to the defenders.

West made the initial mistake, at trick two, when he led the queen of diamonds. On the opening lead of the diamond king, East had played the most discouraging diamond in the deck, the deuce. Certainly if East, who had opened the bidding with one diamond, had wanted diamonds to be continued he would have found a higher diamond to play at trick one.

Actually, of course, East wanted West to lead a heart, since East could trump that lead. But to have assumed that West, a non-expert, could have been that good to have recognized that East wanted a heart lead, was the height of optimism on East's part.

From East's position, he should have appreciated that South's bidding had indicated that the latter possessed a two-suit hand in hearts and clubs; and that there existed the real danger that South might fulfil the slam contract if a diamond were continued at trick two.

To avoid this happening, East should have taken the initiative, and not simply made a negative signal by playing the diamond deuce. Instead, he should have overtaken the king with his ace. He would then have laid down the spade ace, to defeat the slam contract.

Had an expert been in the West seat, it would have been another matter. But East knew that such was not the case.

LABEL MIX UP BUGS WOMAN

WILLENHALL, England (UPI) — Mrs. Lavinia Stain thought there was something wrong with her new can of hair spray — it wouldn't hold her hair in place and the smell was anything but pleasant.

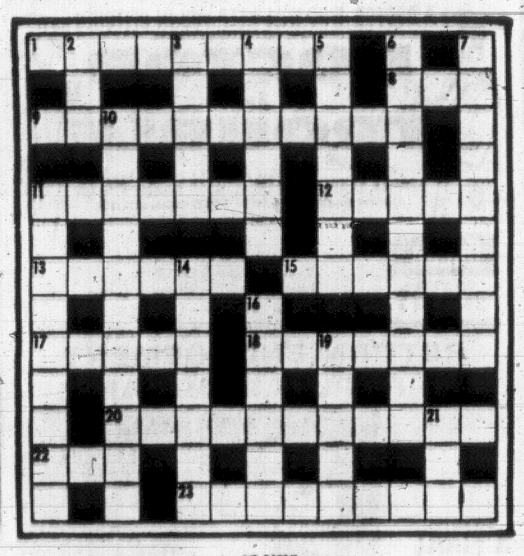

Investigating, Mrs. Stain, 28, peeled off the label and found another underneath it. — for insect repellent. The hair spray label had somehow been stuck on the wrong can.

Funds Frozen

WASHINGTON (AP) President Nixon has clamped a temporary freeze on some $107 million for dams, flood control and other waterworks projects contained in what he once called an overstuffed pork-barrel bill from Congress. The freeze ties up most or all initial construction money for 56 projects across the country.

SINGALONG JUBILEE. 7:30 p.m., Channel 2. Catherine McKinnon sings Everything Is Beautiful and Sittin' in the Sunshine. Fred McKenna offers his version of Long Thin Dawn, and Gene MacLellan sings Don't Tell Me It's Easy.

★ ★ ★

THE MEN FROM SHILOH. 7:30 p.m., Channel 5. "Follow the Leader." The script isn't much, but the cast is excellent, particularly Frank Gorshin and Tony Franciosa as a pair of dim-witted outlaws. Along with a third party, freshly out of prison, they want to form a cattle-rustling gang and try to enlist the leadership of a cousin. He refuses and gets shot dead in the bargain. The crime is rigged to make it look as though Trampas is guilty, but our moustached hero doesn't take that sitting down. He takes Franciosa captive to force a confession from him, while Gorshin and company take the Colonel (Stewart Granger) captive to barter with Trampas.

★ ★ ★

SOMERSET MAUGHAM THEATRE. 8 p.m., Channels 2 and 6. Rule Britannia. P and O. On a ship returning from the Far East an Irish planter is suddenly stricken with an unknown disease. The ship's doctor is unable to diagnose or offer relief, so a ritual cure is attempted.

BEWITCHED. 8 p.m., Channel 8. Samantha's Old Man. Endora turns Darrin into a 72-year-old man; now Larry is trying to promote a romance between the old fellow and a geriatol-generation hippie named Millicent.

★ ★ ★

NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC SOCIETY SPECIAL. 8 p.m., Channel 7. "Ethiopia: The Hidden Empire." The one word that describes and yet defies a description of the unique African nation is time. Ethiopia, as we see it here is timeless and timely; it is an ancient and modern amalgam with its roots far exceeding, in influence, the boughs of its tree. Little time is spent on the modernization of the nation, for there hasn't been that much. But of its historic nuances we see much, from witch doctors and a crocodile hunt to a fascinating segment on an ancient Christian monastery, a hillside fortress which to this day forbids entrances to anything female, human or animal, as was the wish of its founder. Joseph Campenella narrates.

★ ★ ★

THE KRAFT MUSIC HALL. 9 p.m., Channel 5. The "Americana" theme is becoming more and more pronounced on television, with the Music Hall the latest. This might also be called "Father Knows Best" revisited, with Robert Young and Jane Wyatt in the featured roles. Also on hand are Lucie Arnaz and Desi Arnaz Jr., playing the couple's teen-agers, and depicting a generation gap situation. The singing Young Americans provide the background, and there's musical offerings by Lucie and Desi along with readings from Abraham Lincoln, Martin Luther King and Robert F. Kennedy.

YOUR HEALTH: Dr. Walter Alvarez

A man writes to say he has what appears to be an arthritis in his lower spine, but what is alarming is that it is moving upward and threatening to involve the whole spine; it is also very painful. Fortunately, the pain can be relieved somewhat with cortisone. The man says he is beginning to walk with his head forward, and often in order to balance he must walk with his legs spread far apart. His doctor tolk him that he has "ankylosing spondylitis" and says that his spine will almost certainly become ankylosed, that is, solid, due to the sticking together of all the vertebras. Spondylitis refers to inflammation of the vertebras. In lay terms, this condition is called a "poker spine." In severe cases, the disease gets into the hip joints, and the man may have great difficulty in walking.

★ ★ ★

This disease seems to be a special variety of arthritis, because it attacks so definitely the spine, and because it so quickly tends to produce the stiffening with stiffness also sometimes in the hip joints or in the lower back. Because the disease is so severe, for years we doctors thought it must be a variety of rheumatoid arthritis, which is so bad when it affects the hands and feet; but today most experts feel that it is not a form of rheumatoid artritis, but a separate and special type of arthritic disease.

The cause is not known; it does not appear to be familial, and it rarely occurs in women. Commonly, one can easily recognize the disease a block away because of the peculiar way a person has to walk. Often he has to hold his head firmly forward, and as I said, he walks with his legs spread far apart.

The disease can be stopped for a while with cortisone and ACTH, a hormone which produces cortisone in the adrenal glands. Unfortunately, such treatment usually has to be stopped because of its unpleasant side-effects. The disease sometimes responds very well to X-ray treatment, especially if this is started early.

One very encouraging fact is that I have known a number of people with poker spine who were able to continue their daily work for years, in spite of the disease.

SQUIRRELLY WIN IN BULBY TIFF

LONDON (AP) — The squirrels won the battle of Regent's Park today, and U.S. Ambassador Walter Annenberg's crocus bulbs will just have to suffer.

The gardeners who tend the grounds around sumptuous Wingfield House, the ambassador's residence, planted 6,000 of spring's early bloomers, and the word spread round the grey squirrel world like wildfire. It seems they just can't resist crocus bulbs.

SHOT FIVE

The embassy asked the park authorities what to do.

"Shoot them, that's the only way," one official said. "They simply can't be trapped, they're too smart."

This won't do, said the ambassador, and he ordered the shooting stopped.

The crocus crisis was reported on prime television time Tuesday night.

"I had quite a night," said a spokesman at the embassy. "Everybody who thinks he knows about squirrels rang up, suggesting this poison, that poison, rat killer and whatnot. One of the great ideas was a high-pitched whining sound from a special flute. That's supposed to drive them crazy.

"Anyway the squirrels have won for the present."

Look to Open Road For Dates on Campus

Now a Victoria resident, Vancouver-born York recently started a three-man group called Jon York and the Open Road which played its first engagement Saturday at the University of Victoria cabaret, the Jampot.

The group consists of York on guitar, Stephen Elliott, new head of the Victoria Conservatory of Music, on guitar, and Larry Underhill (from Chicago) on mouth harp and bongos.

It's an accoustical group, York said in an interview, with music ranging through the folk, country and blues genres, and even period music. They hope eventually to have a sound something like the English group The Pentangle.

ONE-NIGHTERS

They will play one-nighters mainly at universities, York said, because the bulk of their audience is on the campuses. Their next appearance will be at a Port Alberni coffee house on Saturday.

York wants to stay away from rock. He doesn't like to play an amplified instrument or sing loudly, but that's exactly what he was forced to do to make a living in bars and nightclubs over the last three years.

He also feels campus, concert and coffee house audiences are more appreciative of his music than the bar and nightclub patrons.

Another York idea is to record a B.C. centennial album which would include songs representative of the 1871-1971 period interspersed with spoken passages by old-timers.

He has applied to the Canada Council for a grant to undertake the project, and if he is successful he will record the album with Baroka Records of Vancouver, with whom he has an open contract.

B.C. Urges $1 Billion Export Fund

In a speech prepared for delivery to the B.C. Federation of Agriculture meeting today in New Westminster, Shelford said the money should be made available at 2½ per cent interest by the Bank of Canada.

The fund should have one director from each province and could serve other than agricultural groups, he said.

Such a move would help farmers and others in the low-income bracket to have a better standard of living, Shelford said.

"Pointing to the wonderful standard of living of the more fortunate Canadians isn't good enough," he said. "It is the bottom group we must lift up in the 70s, otherwise our nation will fall apart."

"The rural poor have been disgracefully neglected," Shelford said, suggesting that cutting back agricultural production to domestic requirements would be virtually impossible.

"The alternative is to gear the industry to participate strongly in international trade," he said.

Immolates Self

PARIS (Reuter) — Patrick Rossier, an 18-year-old high school student, climbed onto the roof of his school and died after pouring gasoline over his clothes and igniting them, police reported.

Murder Appeal Dismissed

The British Columbia court of appeal Tuesday dismissed an appeal by Frederick James Morry against his conviction in the March 14, 1968 beating death of Victoria hotel clerk Bruce Van Munster.

Morry was sentenced to life imprisonment after being found guilty a year ago. He appealed on claims that certain statements should not have been admitted as evidence at his trial.

He also claimed that the trial judge should not have refused an application for a new trial made on claims that publicity concerning the incident was prejudicial to him.

The high court upheld the trial decisions made by Mr. Justice R. A. B. Wootton.

Garry Hugh McWhirter, charged jointly with Morry, had his appeal for a new trial dismissed after the two were convicted in New Westminster. He is also serving life imprisonment.

Van Munster's badly decomposed body was found under an abandoned car in the Prospect Lake area in July, 1968, more than four months after he disappeared.

Rural Area Subdivision Code Set

Subivision regulations designed to ensure "safe, healthful, fair, efficient and attractive" subdivision of land throughout the province have been approved by Municipal Affairs Minister Dan Campbell.

The regulations, drawn up after five years of study by an inter-departmental committee, will apply to parts of the province without municipal or regional regulations. They do not apply to Community Planning Area 24 including the Gulf Islands and others parts of the Greater Victoria district where a 10-acre subdivision minimum is in effect.

Campbell said the regulations will be administered by the department of highways.

"The province has provided a foundation on which the regional districts can build," Campbell said. Regional regulations, when passed, will take precedence over the provincial rules.

Ex-Prisoner Praises Jail Forestry Camp

By STEVE HUME

When Bernard Kenny heard Judge J. A. Byers pronounce a sentence of six months in jail July 21, the last thing he expected was to get anything useful out of prison.

He had been found guilty of assualt causing bodily harm against Dr. Alan Beattie after a dispute over the doctor's refusal to prescribe medication for VD until he showed symptoms.

Kenny, 31, had punched the doctor in the mouth after what he described during his trial as a bureaucratic runaround and "moral lectures."

Four months later, released early for good behavior, he relaxed over a beer and described his experiences as a first offender going into Wilkinson Road and later a forestry camp unit near Campbell River.

Social Activist

A slight, bespectacled man, Kenny is both articulate and talkative, especially when it comes to social change and politics.

He was a photographic laboratory technician with the University of Victoria geography department before leaving that job to work with organizations like the Victoria Youth Council and to give volunteer assistance to Cool-Aid.

"I realized right away that I was wrong to hit that doctor," Kenny said, "I should never have lost my temper like that."

But he said that did not allay "the incredible shock" of realizing he had been sentenced to six months in prison.

Grown Men Crying

"There was terrible institutionalized shock. There were grown men crying in their sleep. You had to look through three sets of bars just to see blue sky."

He moved uncomfortably in his chair, as though just the thought of being inside the medium security prison made him nervous. Then he began to talk about the Campbell River camp and his eyes lit up.

"I want to praise these forest camps. I really want to praise them because you can really get your head together there.

"The tactile involvement of just working with your hands, with the earth. It's pretty far out. You'd probably be doing the same thing on a commune, and it was almost a relief to be away from the pollution and noise of the city.

"They made it as pleasant as possible—except, of course, that there were no women."

The minimum security camp, located about 10 miles from Campbell River, consists of five bunkhouses holding 12 people each.

The inmates, mostly serving sentences for first or minor offences, work at maintaining a three-million tree nursery in the government's reforestation program, Kenny said.

There are few guards, but inmates are counted every two hours.

"You know that you can walk away at any time," he said, "but you know too that if you do and you get caught you'll serve the rest of the time at a place like Wilkinson Road. It teaches you responsibility.

Kenny said his fellow prisoners were largely middle-class youth, many of them the kind of youngster thought of as radical, because they disagreed with society's established values.

"The middle class is in jail," he said. "The radicals and revolutionaries are going to find themselves increasingly going to jail because it would seem that violence is the only sane reaction to a hostile society.

'It's Death Trip'

"When the old consciousness rubs with the new consciousness the friction will blossom with visceral outrage. If you display visceral outrage at, for example, a freeway being built through a park, the law will be used against you because society's values are oriented to the rational - economic - efficiency thing. Like it's a death trip."

Kenny said he began attempting to organize and radicalize the other prisoners as soon as he entered the Campbell River camp.

"The first thing we did was organize a counter-rehabilitation program," he said.

"We tried to sell the guards on the idea that they were being sold a lie by society, that they were aiming for totally artificial goals.

"We were laying our entire philosophy on them. And we managed to convert two of them to the point where they started to grow their hair as long as possible and wear sideburns and moustaches."

Tried to Strike

But when Kenny tried to carry his underground prison activity still futher he clashed with authorities, he said, and wound up in solitary confinement.

He said he attempted to organize a strike among the prisoners on the grounds that they should be paid minimum wages for their work.

"Many of us had dependents on the outside. One of the emasculating factors of prison life was that we couldn't provide them with anything."

The proposals, he said, were based on those made by Eldridge Cleaver, ex-convict and Black Panther, for California prisons.

Kenny said the proposals came under heavy pressure from both the authorities and from some of the prisoners.

The people who really got heavy with me were the hard-core cons. The exploited people always seem to be the most reactionary. They said they wanted to maintain the status quo—they didn't want any of my radical ideas."

Futile to Fight

The authorities threatened solitary confinement, extra time and other sanctions and "forced us back to work. After a while it seemed futile to fight the system."

He said he was finally put in solitary confinement for writing a letter to the attorney-general urging that first offenders be separated from "hard-core criminals," bypassing the prison censor.

"Solitary confinement teaches you to be brave," he said. "Once they have done that to you they can't do anything else. That's their ultimate weapon. Once you've licked that you've beat the system."

Kenny said he thought some of the prisoners enjoyed it in jail because it protected them from the pressures of social life.

"The kind of insecurity and paranoia in the drug culture leads to a sense of relief when they're finally caught, I think.

"A lot of the prisoners were relieved to get busted because it meant the pressure was off. After a long stay some would go out and break the law again the very same day because they'd become quite institutionalized."

Rail Coal Contract Battle to Be Reopened

By JOHN MIKA
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — Round three of the great railway battle over coal contracts opens here next Monday with the twice-defeated Burlington Northern Incoporated-Kootenay and Elk Railway partnership coming on stronger than ever.

Their opponent is the Canadian Pacific Railway. The referee is the Canadian Transport Commission.

Nearing Grasp

It seems nearer the BNI-K and E grasp than ever before for two reasons: the leaping demand for thermal coal to supply electrical utilities in the U.S. and Canada's desire to export more oil and gas to the U.S.

The whole struggle between the two giant railways has been influenced by national policy throughout—and that seems to be shifting now.

The nub of the question is whether K and E, a subsidiary of Crowsnest Industries Ltd., is to be allowed to build 80 miles of track from Sparwood, B.C., to the Montana border where BNI would add new track connecting with its mainline through the Pacific Northwest.

That question was decided in Round One on a political basis in 1968 by then-transport minister Paul Hellyer who made it a condition of developing Roberts Bank superport that Rocky Mountain coking coal must be hauled over an all-Canadian rail route to the port for trans-shipment to Japan.

Claim Shot Down

Last spring, Round Two was decided here by a CTC hearing which denied the BNI-K and E claim, supported by the B.C. government, that only the province's consent was needed to build the 80-mile track to connect—with the now-famous half-inch gap at the border—with a new BNI line that would join its mainline in the U.S.

That round, won by the CPR, was purely jurisdictional sparring and the coming hearing will finally get down to the merits of whether large amounts of coal should be added to the CPR unit-train traffic or be siphoned off southward to be hauled over U.S. tracks.

Since the spring, however, both railways have been approached by a consortium of private and public electric utilities in the Pacific Northwest to see if either could supply up to 3 million tons annually of thermal coal for the next 35 years to a new plant likely to be sited in Montana.

Thermal coal is a byproduct of the coking coal screening and washing process at Kaiser's plant near Sparwood which can't be sold now and creates a waste disposal problem.

Double Benefit

The CTC tribunal will be obliged to weigh very carefully the potential double benefit of preventing waste slagheaps from piling up at Canadian mines while opening up a new and lucrative export market.

(Prices haven't been quoted for this particular proposal but elsewhere thermal coal has shot up $3 a ton in the past year to the $7 level because of the critical shortage in the U.S.)

The odds on supplying this market rests heavily on the proposed BNI-K and E line and are heavily against the CPR.

Besides the thermal coal, the southward line is expected to feed 1.5 million tons of coking coal annually to the Kaiser steel plant at Fontana, Calif., at the price level of about $15-$17 a ton.

And, of course, about 7 million tons of coke annually would be hauled over the U.S. tracks for Japanese export from Roberts Bank.

(The only non-coal traffic projected for the new line would be about 100,000 tons annually of wood products shipped to the U.S. from the Kootenay area).

However, perhaps, the most important single event that might decide the final outcome of the battle between the railways will be an almost unnoticed paragraph in the official communique that wound up the annual Canada-U.S. ministerial talks here Nov. 24.

Virtually ignored was an incongruous U.S. minister's agreement of "the importance of coal produced in the United States to the steel industry and to thermal power in eastern Canada and the importance of the Canadian market to United States producers."

Withstood Drive

Incongruous because the White House has been under tremendous bombardment by U.S. utilities and their powerful lobbies to stop shipping desperately needed thermal coal out of the country at a time when many U.S. cities face brownouts.

So far, the Nixon administration has withstood the fierce onslaught of the protectionists who would cut off the U.S. coal supply to Ontario's steel mills and power plants eyen though the crisis has almost doubled coal costs to U.S. consumers withn the past 12 months.

There was no mention of any tit-for-tat in the communique — not a word about Canada recognizing the importance to the U.S. of a new supply of western Canadian coal being sent south of the border to balance the situation.

But it would be difficult indeed to believe that some such thought was totally eschewed by the U.S. cabinet ministers on the energy hot seat or that their Canadian counterparts would refuse to examine the possibilities of helping the U.S. while making a profit and clinching the safety-lock on eastern Canadian interests at the same time.

After all, in the communique's very next paragraph just that kind of east-west balancing deal was mooted for oil.

Ministers Agree

The U.S. ministers agreed that if overseas oil imports by eastern Canada were cut off, the U.S. would come to the rescue and pump oil northward on the east coast and "in such circumstances it would be reasonable to expect that western Canadian (oil surplus) would be available to offset U.S. supplies diverted to Canada."

The similarity between that arrangement for oil and one for coal may not necessarily be drawn to the CTC tribunal's attention by explicit federal government references.

(Although the communique also said that both sides agreed that discussions would continue to work out mutually acceptable arrangements, "consistent with the responsibilities of the regulatory bodies concerned, for an increasing trade in crude oil, petroleum products and OTHER FUELS between the United States and Canada.")

But the BUI-K and E legal team undoubtedly will draw the parallel at next weeks' hearings and the CTC will have to consider the new factors in the equation of national interest and coal route policy.

B.C. Outstrips Other Provinces In Immigration

By JOHN MIKA
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — British Columbia and Prince Edward Island have been the only provinces to buck the trend by attracting more immigrants so far this year.

Total immigration to Canada up to the end of September was 113,323, down 6,369 from the corresponding figure last year a government report revealed today.

B.C.'s nine-month intake went up 268 to a total of 16,598. At the same time, P.E.I. attracted 141 immigrants, two more than last year.

However, the Yukon and the Northwest Territories combined also took a larger number during the three quarters—665 compared with 126 in 1969.

Alberta dropped 367 to a total of 8,253.

Largest cut by far was in Quebec where the total plummeted by 5,575 to 21,523 this year. Ontario was next with a decrease of 1,424 to a total of 62,089.

The report said 6,456 immigrants entered B.C. during the July-September quarter this year, behind only the 6,611 entering Quebec and 22,717 entering Ontario.

The nine-month national total included 53,301 non-working dependants and students, down 3,267. The immigrants destined for the labor force totalled 60,022, down 3,102—almost all of it accounted for by a drop of 2,813 in the professional and technical category's total of 17,266 so far this year.

Air Parcel Deadlines Draw Near

Christmas deadlines for surface mail to overseas points have passed, the Canada Post Office has announced, but there is still time to send letters and parcels by air.

The air letter deadline to Great Britain is Dec. 14, while for parcels the final date is Dec. 9.

Letter deadline for most points in Europe, Africa, Asia, South America, the Caribbean and Australia is Dec. 11, while parcels should be sent at least four days earlier.

In Canada, out-of-town mail should not go later than Dec. 13, and the local mail cutoff is Dec. 17.

Last year about 100,000 parcels could not be delivered because they were either badly wrapped, incorrectly addressed or had no return address. A post office release urged the public to "overwrap," for example, by using corrugated cardboard boxes, not shoe boxes, to send items.

The post office also suggests the use of speed labels—local, out-of-town, first-class—to simplify the sorting process. The labels can be obtained free at any office.

Asian Officials Grapple With Over-Population

KUALA LUMPUR, Malaysia (AP) — Representatives of Southeast Asian countries who met here to discuss population growth had mixed feelings on how — or whether — to control it.

The region now is estimated to have 280 million people. During the next 15 years, experts say the population will increase 50 per cent, adding 147 million people to be fed, clothed, housed, educated and employed.

Singapore, with 9,000 persons a square mile, has adopted a vigorous family-planning policy which has cut the growth rate by half to two per cent in recent years. It's the only country in the region with legal abortion.

Malaysia, declared opponent of abortion, is the only other country to fix a specific target in its population program. It wants last year's three-per-cent growth cut to two per cent by 1985.

Little urgency for such planning was evident among ministers from Cambodia, Indonesia, the Philippines, Thailand and South Vietnam.

The Cambodian social welfare minister, Chau Xeng, Ua, said:

"In Cambodia, population growth does not pose an acute problem because we still have vast regions in the north and northeast yet to be developed.

"The welfare of the Cambodian people is not jeopardized by the birth rate at the present time so there is no need to consider limited family size as an ideal."

Indonesia's social welfare minister, Dr. Kijai Hadji Idham, disagreed. "Demographically, economically, socially and politically, the situation in Southeast Asia is one of the most critical in the world," he said.

The belief that sparsely-populated nations need more people quickly "neglects the fact that large capital expenditures are necessary for cultivation and settlement in empty land," he added.

Average growth rates in 1960-68 ranged from 1.9 per cent for Nepal to Singapore's 2.3. The Philippines' 4.5 per cent was highest.

But Nepal's birth rate is twice that of Singapore's 2.3 per cent and its death rate almost four times the island's 5.5 per cent.

On the other hand, the Philippines' birth rate is slightly lower than Singapore's; its death rate slightly higher but its infant mortality rate almost three times as high.

It was clear from the conference that the problem must be approached mainly on national levels, by officials who understand their people's feelings and customs regarding the sensitive matter of birth control.

School Grounds Use Backed By Proposal

More use of Esquimalt's school grounds for recreational purposes after school hours may result from a step taken by Esquimalt council Monday.

Council approved in principle a recommendation by its recreation commission that the municipality assume responsibility for maintaining and marking school playgrounds on a cost-sharing basis with the Greater Victoria school board.

The proposal was made to the commission by the school board administration.

Bus Routes Change Hands

The change, agreed earlier, means the end to VICL buses running between Victoria and Vancouver and Nanaimo and Vancouver. Previously, the two companies split the service.

Pacific Stage Lines is a subsidiary of B.C. Hydro. VICL continues its terminals in Victoria and Nanaimo for its other services and acting as an agent for PSL. It sold eight buses to PSL.

Liz, Burton Not Special In Eyes of Heathrow Chief

LONDON (AP) — Richard Burton and Elizabeth Taylor don't rate VIP treatment at London's Heathrow Airport, and neither do other film stars, airport officials say.

A flurry erupted two weeks ago when a Pan American World Airways official presented the Burtons' papers to immigration and customs officials and let the couple bypass the officials and go directly out to their private jet.

"The people responsible have had their knuckles rapped," an airport spokesman said. An order has gone out saying film stars must be treated just like other passengers from now on, the spokesman said.

17-Year-Olds Outshine Adults In Writing Test

By ERIC WENTWORTH

WASHINGTON (WP) — Most young Americans won't tolerate a provocative statement about racial superiority on radio or television, but are somewhat less intolerant when the topic is Russia or belief in God.

Young adults invoke the right of free speech more readily than 17-year-olds. While 13-year-olds are least prone of the three to defend controversial statements on such grounds.

SECOND BATCH

These findings emerge from the second batch of testing results on citizenship which officials of the United States National Assessment of Educational Progress have released.

Assessment officials also unveiled results of their writing ability tests, which showed that young adults (aged 26 to 35) display less skill than 17-year-olds.

The assessment, financed by the Carnegie Corp. and U.S. Office of Education, is a pioneer effort to find out what young people actually know. Traditional national testing ranks students against each other or national "norms."

10 SUBJECTS

Done by the education commission of the states, an organization of state political and school officials, the assessment covers 10 subjects. Results for science, and the first batch for citizenship, were released in July.

Officials compare the project to a census, based on sampling nearly 100,000 individuals in each subject. They say the results will provide "benchmark data" for comparison in future testing.

In citizenship particularly, the results involve social awareness and attitudes as well as knowledge.

For the free-speech question, the subjects were asked whether a person should, or should not, be allowed to say in a broadcast that "some races of people are better than others."

VARIATION

Only 16 per cent of the 13-year-olds, 31 per cent of the 17-year-olds and 37 per cent of the young adults said this statement was permissible.

Some 21 per cent of the 13s, 49 per cent of the 17s and 56 per cent of the young adults would allow the statement that "Russia is better than the United States" to be broadcast.

And 25 per cent of the 13s, 49 per cent of the 17s and 55 per cent of the young adults would allow the statement that "it is not necessary to believe in God."

Smaller percentages in each group would allow the airing of all three statements. Asked for a reason, 3 per cent of the 13s, 17 per cent of the 17s and 24 per cent of the young adults gave freedom of speech — or words to that effect.

LAW AND ORDER

In a "law and order" question, more than 90 per cent in each age group knew at least one reason why laws are needed. Even among 9-year-olds, the fourth age group being tested, 88 per cent could give a reason for having playground rules.

In a question about war, well over 90 per cent in each of the three older age groups named at least one country where there had been fighting in the previous 12 months. Smaller percentages, however, could say what the fighting was about.

As to preventing wars, 60 per cent of the 9s, 77 per cent of the 13s and 88 per cent of the 17s — but only 65 per cent of the young adults — offered at least one way. Assessment officiazls suggested that young adults might be more "jaundiced."

SPECULATION

Assessment tests on writing ranged from thank-you notes and telephone messages for 9-year-olds, to filling out applications and describing an auto accident for the 17s. Some 88 per cent of the 13s, but only 71 per cent of the young adults who had taken a recent trip, reported writing letters or postcards, keeping a diary, taking notes or otherwise putting pen to paper.

Officials speculated that lack of practice, inferior prior schooling, or less interest in co-operating might explain why young adults did less well than 17s in the over-all writing results.

FOR SALMON . . .

Resource Study of Watershed Urged

By HUMPHRY DAVY

An over-all resource study of the 33,000-acre Goldstream watershed is proposed by citizen groups to ensure that sufficient water is available the year around for salmon in Goldstream.

The study would also look into the capabilities of the area for forestry, recreation, wildlife and fisheries in general.

The lack of water to enable salmon to spawn in Goldstream last month focussed public attention on the need for a resource survey of the watershed now solely administered by the Greater Victoria Water Board.

The board released water just in time to save the fish, but during the summer months thousands of salmon fry died because only a trickle was allowed to flow into the stream.

Conservation and recreationists have requested the Community Planning Association of Canada, Capital Region branch, to call a meeting to discuss the proposal.

John Di Castri, chairman of the association, said it would be held sometime in the new year and would be opened to all interested organizations.

He said several people intended to raise the subject at the association's Nov. 24 meeting, but discussion for provincial legislation to permit regional districts to take on conservation programs took up the time.

John Harris, president of the Victoria Outdoor Club, said the request for a study should not be interpreted as a lack of confidence in water commissioner Ron Upward who is responsible for the management of the public water and land.

•

"But he can't possibly have all the data necessary for the long-term planning of the watershed," he said. "It would take a team of men trained in various disciplines to provide him with all the answers."

Wilf Harper, a director of the Victoria Canoe Club, said the Greater Victoria water district is a "little empire" unto itself.

The entrie planning of the regional district—population, environment and recreation—is tied up with the watershed," he pointed out. "Yet the Greater Victoria water district is a separate, independent body divorced from the regional district.

"A decision it makes today may prove to be a bad one in 50 years from now," he added.

Howard English, a director of the Victoria Fish and Game Protective Association, said it is time the board took a good look at the water needs for people, fish and recreation.

Many people share his views and are concerned at the board's action rejecting legal responsibility to provide water for salmon. Federal Fisheries Minister Jack Davis claims it has under the 100-year-old Fisheries Act.

The Greater Victoria watershed consists of 33,000 acres, or more than the combined areas of Victoria and Saanich. From north to south it measures 17 miles.

The area includes Sooke Lake which is almost twice as large as Elk-Beaver Lake and three lakes over 100 acres in area, plus many smaller bodies of water.

Most of the larger lakes are man-made by damming watercourses. Almost the whole area is forest land, and topographically it has hills rising 2,000 feet.

The regional district park board in 1969 requested a study be made to determine if certain areas of the watershed could be opened to the general public for recreation.

It suggested that the southern end of the water district's land be opened to recreation because it is not in a watershed used for water supply purposes.

The board ignored the regional district's recommendation.

However, the majority of citizen groups believe an overall resource study should be undertaken first before deciding to open areas for recreation. The water district would then have all the available data for long-range planning.

A study of this kind is usually undertaken by government resource experts or by a university.

The study basically takes in soils, land forms, geology, climatology, vegetation, and the conditions of all trees.

Data collected from these detailed studies are used to determine the capabilities of the land for wildlife, water and other resources.

The data also provides requirements for human use of the area and its advantages, and water needs for future industrial supply.

Mountain Of Letters Still Rising

LOS ANGELES (AP) — A week after saying she was so lonely she could die, Jean Rosenstein sits in her tiny apartment surrounded by thousands of letters, several from Canadians.

"This will last for the rest of my life," the 84-year-old widow said Tuesday. "I asked for so little and received so very, very much. Thank everyone for letting me come to life again."

Last week the Los Angeles Times published a letter from Mrs. Rosenstein in which she said: "I'm so very old, so very lonely. I hear from no one. Will somebody call me?"

Since U.S. Thanksgiving Day last Thursday, mail has poured in from all over the United States and Canada and Mrs. Rosenstein received so many calls she had to take her phone off the hook.

'Letter Not Meant For Publication'

Mayor Courtney Haddock has received a letter from Federal Fisheries Minister Jack Davis apologizing for the publication of a letter ordering the city to provide water in Goldstream for spawning.

The letter was released to the press by a member outside his department and was not meant for publication, the minister said.

"I must apologize for the publication of the contents which I addressed to you early in November," he said.

The mayor said he was glad to receive the apology.

He reiterated his claim that the minister had no jurisdiction under the Canadian Fisheries Act to order Victoria to release water for fish.

However, the minister in his letter did not acknowledge he lacks such authority. He simply apologizes for its publication.

No Shortage Here Of Anesthetists

A shortage of anesthetists has led Vancouver General Hospital to cut out all but emergency surgery on Saturdays but the same shortage does not prevail in Greater Victoria, a hospital spokesman said Tuesday.

Dr. A. J. Pickles, executive director at Royal Jubilee Hospital, said there is no shortage of anesthetists in Victoria, in fact the number is just about perfect for the community's need.

Both Jubilee and St. Joseph's do some elective surgery on Saturday but Pickles noted that most of the surgery conducted at his hospital on Saturdays is of an emergency nature.

The order cancelling elective surgery at Vancouver General is effective immediately and for an indefinite period, the hospital announced Monday.

A hospital statement said:

"The hospital board and the medical board ... regret the necessity of this temporary expediency but recognize it is caused by a current shortage of anesthetists in this community and on this continent."

The statement added that every effort will be made to incorporate the existing total number of operations into the new five-day period weekly.

Exhibits Produced At Trial

The second day of the Victoria county court trial of Siegfried Marquardt produced masses of documentary exhibits and the cross-examination of American financial expert Robert Medearis.

Marquardt, 38, pleaded not guilty Monday to a 12-count charge of fraud involving $22,789 before Judge M. T. Drake sitting without a jury.

Many of the exhibits, RCMP Sub-inspector John Anderson testified Tuesday, were obtained during an investigation of the accused's Sea View Road home in November, 1969.

Medearis was a principal in a plan to convert the United States naval vessel, Robert Emery, into a San Francisco restaurant and family entertainment centre.

Court was told both Victoria lawyer David Hummel and the late William Osland were involved in the plan which never reached fruition.

Stanfield Vows Full Support To Henderson

Mr. Henderson told the Commons public accounts committee that the government had decreased the effectiveness of the auditor-general staff by cutting salaries and diminishing job classifications.

Meanwhile Mr. Stanfield told a news conference that he has urged Conservative MPs to make a public assault on a government bill that would restrict the powers of the auditor-general.

Mr. Henderson's job is to report to Parliament—not the government—on the operations of federal departments, including cases of waste and inefficiency. He has raised government hackles with exposures of the refit expenses for the aircraft carrier Bonaventure, and costs of studies of a Prince Edward Island causeway.

BILL RESTRICTS POWERS

The accounts committee is studying a government bill introduced last month that would restrict the auditor-general's power to comment on government waste.

The bill would limit his role to book-keeping—auditing the accounts kept by individual departments.

Mr. Henderson told the committee the government had already tried to impair his effectiveness by downgrading the "core of my staff—the guts of my office."

Twenty-eight directors and regional directors had been dropped one salary grade in 1969.

"Nowhere else, including the treasury board, has there been such a wholesale downgrading," Mr. Henderson said.

After he had complained to Treasury Board President C. M. Drury, who has criticized Mr. Henderson's activities, a committee was set up to assess the salary structure of the staff. The committee confirmed the downgrading in a report a year ago.

The government had rejected repeated requests for explanations of the downgrading, the auditor-general said.

Mr. Stanfield promised unrelenting Conservative opposition to the bill when it comes to the Commons for second reading.

MUZZLE TRY DENIED BY DRURY

OTTAWA (CP) — C. M. Drury, president of the treasury board, denied today that there is any government attempt to muzzle Auditor-General Maxwell Henderson.

Drury, appearing before the Senate finance committee, said he hopes Mr. Henderson will continue untrammelled in his job as watchdog of the treasury on behalf of Parliament.

SAN FRANCISCO (Reuter) — Police battled with bands of youths in the exclusive Nob Hill area in a violent outburst Tuesday during street demonstrations against the current visit here by Vice-President Nguyen Cao Ky of South Vietnam.

TWO WOMEN INMATES of a South Vietnamese prison north of Saigon claimed today riot police beat and tear-gassed more than 100 women prisoners and threw lye or acid on the group. They claim they were among 416 political prisoners who were protesting conditions in the jail and that some were still detained although their sentences had expired.

Ottawa Drops Price Guides

Labor Support Lacking

Times News Services

OTTAWA—The federal Prices and Incomes Commission is abandoning its guidelines for price and salary increases at the end of this year but is to continue investigating inflationary factors in the next few months without firm criteria.

Dr. John Young, head of the commission, said Tuesday the policing body has terminated an agreement struck with business leaders in February of this year to limit price increases to less than corresponding cost increases, a move which put a severe squeeze on profits in private industry.

Young, after a day-long meeting with business leaders Tuesday, said the commission had asked the industrialists voluntarily to extend the agreement through the first six months of 1971.

SLACK IN ECONOMY

A declaration drafted by the commission and 50 top business leaders at the Tuesday meeting pointed out that business conditions are uncertain, there is slack in the economy and government is moving toward stimulation of activity to counter feared record winter unemployment.

Under these conditions "and without wholehearted support and parallel action on the part of labor and government," the statement said, the continuation of formal restraints in 1971 "would no longer be warranted."

When the commission, created by Prime Minister Pierre Elliot Trudeau in the face of a growing inflation problem, conceived its six per cent guidelines in February of this year they were to be the basis of a three-party agreement between government, business and labor.

SALARIES UP

Business and government reached agreement and in most cases maintained it. Labor made no commitment and the commission, with no real powers, was only able to look on helplessly while boosts of 18, 20 and even 25 per cent in salary contracts were ratified.

Young said Tuesday he does not think abandonment of the

DEPUTY TO DOUGLAS SEEKS NDP LEADERSHIP

OTTAWA (CP) — David Lewis, 61-year-old deputy leader of the New Democratic Party, formally announced today his candidacy for his party's leadership at its April convention here.

Lewis told a news conference that he would win handily if the convention were held in the next few weeks.

But he would not be so foolhardy to take as granted an April victory.

The other announced candidates are Ed Broadbent, 34, MP for Oshawa-Whitby; John Harney, 39, former party secretary in Ontario; and James Laxer, 29, representing the left-wing Waffle group.

Munro Attacks Man-Made Murk

WINNIPEG (CP) — Health service leaders must extend preventive medicine practices from the bedside into the physical and social environment, including areas of low-cost housing, automobile safety, and air and water pollution controls, Health Minister John Munro said today.

KIDNAPPED West German Consul Eugene Beihl is being held hostage in San Sebastian, Spain, by Basque terrorists. See story Page 52.

"It is downright inefficient to be constantly treating people for respiratory ailments and lung problems if the air a patient breathes outside doctors' offices, hospitals, clinics, is capable of undoing all the treatment received within," Munro told delegates to the third annual Manitoba Health Conference.

"It is an insult to the practice of medicine if the water we ingest in so many ways contains pollutants with the power to out-fight or outlast our strongest medicines."

MAN-MADE

The federal minister told about 2,000 delegates that as people dedicated to the pursuit of human health, "health professionals cannot allow the menace of man-made murk to go on festering in our atmosphere and in our rivers and lakes."

He said "every conceivable pressure" must be brought to bear "to halt the polluters in their tracks now."

Munro said Canada's worst health problems, both mental and physical, are found in the poverty pockets.

SENSITIVE

He told the health professionals they must become more sensitive to the phenomenon of drug abuse among young people.

"The foremost need is information—objective, factual, non-moralistic information—that will reach experimenting youth and be believed by them."

He told a news conference the federal government will be introducing a drug program in a few months that will make available to drug abusers medical facilities, analytical services and information and education services.

Put Mine Waste in Ground, Salmon Group Urges Utah

By DOUG MacRAE
Times Staff

PORT HARDY — Put it back, says the Pacific Salmon Society.

The society was one of four objectors heard today at a pollution control board hearing here into an application on behalf of a multi-million dollar copper-molybdenum mining corporation.

The U.S.-based Utah Construction and Mining Company wants to dump 9.3 million gallons of solid mine wastes daily into Rupert Inlet.

Salmon Society representative Patrick Moore, in a brief prepared for the hearing, suggested stockpiling the waste from the strip mining operation, then replacing it in stages as the mining progresses.

Later today, pollution control director William Venables denied he had said Utah Construction and Mining Co. had

Venables was quoted by the Vancouver Province this morning as saying the Utah project would go ahead as planned despite today's hearing into the pollution aspect of the mine-mill complex.

"Until I put my signature on the necessary documents, nothing here is decided . . . I have no authority to determine whether or not this mine will function," said Venables.

The company said its discharge would contain mine tailings and residual quantities of cyanide, zinc, and reagents normally associated with mining and milling operations.

The mine-mill project, at a site 10 miles south of here, is well along in construction, with initial deliveries to a Japanese buyer scheduled for early 1972.

Grandmother Battles Mine Giant In Bid to Halt Sea Pollution

Times Staff

PORT HARDY — Mrs. Elaine Price is a young grandmother from Duncan who stood up today to a giant mining corporation on the matter of environment.

She'd rather an expert speak instead but she is one of only four allowed to be heard in opposition to the Utah dumping application and she's ready to give it her best.

"I sincerely hope the director (William Venables, the province's director of pollution control) is not mocking the ordinary citizen who is deeply concerned about the environment in British Columbia," she says in her four-page brief.

"But the set-up of this hearing would certainly lead one to doubt the bona fides of the whole procedure."

Venables had earlier ruled he would only hear the four objectors who confirmed their stand by a second letter after the pollution control branch received close to 150 objections to granting the mine dumping permit earlier this year.

Mrs. Price is a member of the Cowichan-Malahat branch of SPEC and that organization helped her prepare as best she could for today's presentation.

Kurt Horn, president of the SPEC branch, said today Mrs. Price worried so much about appearing at the hearing she became physically ill.

Veteran Pensions Up 10%

OTTAWA (CP) — Veterans Affairs Minister Jean-Eudes Dube introduced legislation in the Commons today that would raise all veterans' pensions by 10 per cent by next April 1.

There will also be a 15-per-cent increase in veterans' allowances, the minister said, before the legislation received first reading.

Under the bill, a married person receiving 100-per-cent disability pension would receive an increase of $408 to $4,464 annually. A single person eligible for 100-per-cent disability pension would get a raise of $324 to $3,504 annually and a widow an increase of $240 to $2,640 a year.

The increase in the maximum allowances obtainable by a single veteran would rise $16 a month to $121 monthly. A married veteran would receive an additional $26 a month to $201 monthly.

RETAIN MEANS TEST

The bill followed "the most extensive review of the pension act in half a century," Dube said.

$1 BUYS 100 CUPS OF MILK

Children who grow up without enough food can suffer brain damage, underdeveloped bodies and a host of other disorders.

Most of us do not know what real hunger means but, to millions of Asians, it is as familiar as sunlight and darkness, and just as recurrent.

The dollar you send to the children of Asia fund buys 100 cups of milk. Milk, of course, is a high-protein food. Protein shortages have become the world's greatest food problem.

The Unitarian Service Committee feeds and houses abandoned babies in Mokpo, Korea. Your donation to help their work will not eliminate hunger, but they will end somebody's hunger.

United Nations consultants say Korea has passed the stage of needing material relief and has entered an era of rehabilitation and economic development.

In 1969, the country's rate of economic growth was 12 per cent. But USC executive director Dr. Lotta Hitschmanova says the government continues to emphasize economic progress rather than solutions to social problems.

Less than three per cent of the government's budget pays for health and welfare programs, while 35 per cent goes to defence.

This adds up to a continuing demand for basic necessities. USC programs in Korea meet part of this demand.

SCHOOL STARS STILL PLAYING AND HOPING

Puerto Rico Shades Cents On Wild Pitch

BARRANQILLA, Colombia — A wild pitch by Murray Gage-Cole of Vancouver in the eighth inning gave Puerto Rico a 2-1 victory over Canada on the last day of the world amateur baseball championships.

The Canadians finished the round-robin event in a three-way tie with The Netherlands and Italy for last place, beating the Dutch, 4-0, Monday for their only win after losing their first eight games.

Canada, represented mainly by members of the Victoria Centennials, was to play Italy as well as Puerto Rico Tuesday, but the Italian game was called off.

Gage-Cole limited the Puerto Ricans to four hits in going the distance but a tying run in the second inning and the unearned score in the eighth sent him down to his fourth loss of the tournament.

His teammates collected eight hits, drew four bases on balls and had the advantage of three Puerto Rican errors, but couldn't push across more than their first-inning run.

ERRORS HELPED

That came when Barry Harvey of Victoria, on base on a fielder's choice, advanced on a single by Yves Blanchard of Montreal and scored when Russ Holmes of Victoria reached first base on an error.

Tom McKenzie of Kitchener, Ont., and Dave McKay of Vancouver each had two hits for the Canadians, who committed two errors.

TIE FOR LEAD

Cuba defeated Colombia 6-0 and ended in a tie with the United States for first place, each with 9-1 records. The Cubans and Americans will play a three-game series to decide the title.

The U.S. scheduled the first game today, but the Cubans protested, saying they had not been consulted and wanted a two-day layoff before the playoff.

In other games Tuesday, The Netherlands Antilles defeated Nicaragua 7-6 and the Dominican Republic overwhelmed The Netherlands 15-6.

Pair by Maki Help Canucks Improve Hold

After all, here was a club labelled for the tail end of the NHL's East Division entrenched in fourth place ahead of three clubs, including two members of the establishment—Detroit Red Wings and Toronto Maple Leafs, with three wins, five losses and two ties.

Poile, whose years in hockey's front office should have dictated a more conservative forecast for his club, said at the time he could see no reason why the Canucks shouldn't remain fourth, even though 11 of their next 15 games were on the road.

"I don't say we are better than Detroit or Toronto, but we are certainly as good as Buffalo (Sabres)," he noted, including the other 1970 expansionist club in his division assessment.

LEAD WINGS BY FOUR

That 15-game span ended by Tuesday night and there was Vancouver still in fourth place after a 5-4 come-from-behind victory over Philadelphia Flyers.

The win, on the strength of third-period goals by Wayne Maki, with his second of the game and 11th of the year, and Ray Cullen, padded Vancouver's lead over fifth-place Detroit to four points and moved them to within two of third-place Montreal Canadiens.

In the 15-game stretch, the Canucks won six, lost eight and tied one to continue their surprise bid for a playoff spot in Vancouver's return to big-time hockey and another shot at the Stanley Cup, the trophy they won last with Vancouver Millionaires in 1915.

GARDNER GREAT

The Canucks opened up a 1-0 first period lead but trailed when Jim Johnson scored twice early in the middle period and the Flyers dominated play for most of the game.

Except for the outstanding acrobatics of Vancouver goaltender George Gardner, the outcome might have been otherwise as the 29-year-old native of Lachine, Que., kicked out 44 shots to stop the Philadelphians.

Liston Treated After Car Crash

LAS VEGAS, Nev. (AP) — Sonny Liston, former world heavyweight boxing champion, was reported in satisfactory condition in hospital Tuesday, six days after being injured in a traffic accident.

Liston suffered what the Nevada highway patrol described as minor injuries in an intersection accident. He was cited by the highway patrol for failure to yield the right of way.

Two days after the accident he was admitted to hospital.

Little Bear Wins Grappling Battle

Not Guilty Plea From Pitts' Wife

BRIGHTON, Colo. (AP) — Ethel J. Pitts, 34, pleaded innocent Monday to a charge of murder in the shooting death of her husband, Canadian Football League player Ernest Pitts.

Mrs. Pitts will go to trial March 16. She is free on $20,000 bond.

ROCKY TEACHES JAKE HIS 'LITERARY STYLE'

NEW YORK (AP) — Rocky Graziano gave what he called a "literary tea" Monday for his chum, Jake La Motta, who has just published his autobiography, Raging Bull.

There wasn't a drop of tea in sight, but more potent stuff flowed as the two former middleweight boxing champions mugged for reporters and cameramen.

"Rocky was my diction teacher," said La Motta and then, bewildered by a few of Rocky's cracks, remarked:

"The magnitude of your copious assertion is far too sagacious for my diminutive comprehension."

"I memorize pretty good," he said when asked how long it took to learn that statement.

Graziano won the crown in 1947 from Tony Zale and lost it to him again the next year. La Motta became champ in 1949 and lost the title to Sugar Ray Robinson in 1951. The sluggers never faced one another in the ring.

Perfect Mark Brings Crown

Oak Bay rang up an impressive record of 17 wins and one tie in 18 starts to win the May Tully Shield, emblematic of supremacy in the Lower Vancouver Island Girls' Field Hockey League.

Esquimalt was the only club to avoid defeat at the hands of Bays when the teams fought to a 1-1 draw on Oct. 13 and the only other goal allowed by Oak Bay was during a 6-1 rout of Norfolk House on Oct. 1.

Esquimalt downed Claremont by default, Mount Douglas defeated Reynolds by default, Victoria edged Norfolk House 2-1 and St. Margaret's battled Mount View to a 1-1 tie in other final games.

FROM WHITE TO RED

Luis Changes Color of Sox

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Two rebuilding clubs have landed Luis Aparicio look-alikes at baseball's winter trade market, but the prototype shortstop belongs to Boston Red Sox today and they're building a penant dream.

Chicago White Sox, cleaning house after a last-place finish in the American League's Western Division, dealt Aparicio to Boston Tuesday for second baseman Mike Andrews and 21-year-old shortstop Luis Alvarado.

Meanwhile, Baltimore Orioles reluctantly parted with Aparicio's protege, 21-year-old shortstop Enzo Hernandez, in a six-player swap that also sent pitcher Tom Phoebus to San Diego Padres of the National League in exchange for pitchers Pat Dobson and Tom Dukes.

In other major league transactions, Atlanta Braves traded infielder Bob Aspromonte to New York Mets for reliever Ron Herbel and Houston Astros purchased catcher Jack Hiatt from Chicago Cubs.

COMPARED TO LUIS

"Reports from our scouts compare Alvarado to a young Luis Aparicio," Tanner said after the White Sox swung their third deal of the two-day-old winter meetings.

"I'm not saying Hernandez is another Aparicio, but he reminds me a lot of Luis when he was a kid," said Orioles' skipper Earl Weaver, whose world champs looked toward Dobson as another potential 20-game winner.

"We feel we can win the pennant with Aparicio," said the Red Sox, skipper, Eddie Kasko, who plans to shift Rico Petrocelli from short to third base to make room for the 155-pound veteran of 15 American League season.

Aparicio, a superb shortstop who has led the league in stolen bases nine times, batted a career-high .313 in 146 games last season.

ONCE WITH LEAFS

Andrews, 27 and at one time with Toronto Maple Leafs of the International League, batted .253 for the Red Sox, with 17 homers and 65 runs batted in.

Alvarado, the International League's Most Valuable Player in 1969, began his rookie American League season as Boston's regular third baseman but wound up dividing the year between the Red Sox and Louisville.

The Orioles, who traded veteran relief pitcher Moe Drabowsky to St. Louis Cardinals Monday, gave up Phoebus, Hernandez and pitchers Fred Benne and Al Severinsen to get Dobson and Dukes, San Diego's biggest winner and second-busiest reliever, respectively, last season.

BOWLER OF WEEK

Returning to winner's circle for fifth straight season is Bill Burke, who captured the men's tenpin award during eighth week of annual Times-sponsored Bowler-of-the-Week contest. Burke, who won roll-off crown for same division in 1967, earned weekly award and another berth in Bowler-of-the-Year rolloffs with 174-245-234—653 series in Friday Niters League at Mayfair Lanes.

'Old Order' Amateurs Against New Thinking

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The definition of "amateur athlete" in the United States must be cleansed of hypocrisy and updated to meet realistic modern demands, says John Kelly, first vice-president of the Amateur Athletic Union.

"We've got to get with it," said Kelly, here for the AAU convention. "We have to reimburse amateur athletes who take time off from their jobs."

The former rowing champion is a four-time Olympic games sculler and possibly the next AAU president.

In the AAU tradition, ascension of the first vice-president to president is a sure thing, but some of the old order types who rule the union don't accept Kelly's ideas.

"I'm of the Avery Brundage school . . . I think commercialism is ruining sport. With the current bend toward professional sports in the land, unless we have a great economic depression we may see the end of amateur sport, of the Olympic games as we know them."

"There could be trouble about his (Kelly's) moving in to succeed Jesse in the election Friday. The next man up, David Ravines might pass him up."

Drakes Close In On Hoop Leaders

Drake Hotel opened up a 44-27 lead at halftime Tuesday and then went on to collect an 88-58 Victoria Senior Men's Basketball League victory over winless Robertson's Men's Wear at Oak Bay High School.

Victory brought Drakes within two points of Hotel Douglas and Labatts, tied for the league lead with six points each.

Carry Andrews and Jim Cunningham fired 16 points apiece while Ed Steele (15), Wayne Allen (13), Dave Price (12) and Paul Drummond (11) also contributed heavily to the attack.

SAINTS WILL HELP . . . . . IN FIGHT WITH ALI

Daisy's Charm in Oscar's Corner

NEW YORK (AP) — Daisy, the Latin American bombshell, has put her magic spell on Oscar Bonavena and predicts that the Argentine heavyweight is a cinch to stop Muhammad Ali in their 15-round fight at the Garden next Monday night.

"I do nothing bad to Ali. I just pass all my good luck along to Ringo," the curvacious actress, singer and dancer from Puerto Rico said today, using the popular nickname for her longtime friend and movie co-star.

"I put a special string of beads around Ringo's neck, I feed and talk to my saints. Ringo cannot lose."

Daisy Guzman, 25, a flowered pants suit covering her 36-23-37 figure and a matching silk handkerchief knotted about her long, blonde tresses, was on hand to greet her ring hero when Bonavena came in from Grossinger's Tuesday for his formal physical examination.

She was permitted in Bonavena's dressing room where she proceeded to rub the red beads between her hands, drape them over the fighter's neck and then climax the ceremony with a buss on the cheek.

"I did the same thing five years ago in Buenos Aires when I first met him."

"He won his fight and has had much good luck since. If he keeps this good luck charm on his person Monday night he will win again."

She said on the night before she had given the beads a special blessing when she placed food and tequilla before her saints.

"I have a whole cabinet of saints," she said. "They will take care of Ringo for me."

ANOTHER LOOK

Learning to Love The Ladies on Ice

By Jack Scott

There comes a time, in writing these little pieces for the paper, when you must stand up like a man in full view—all five-foot-three—and eat some words. That time has come in my strange and melancholy affair with the lady curlers of the world, of whose scorn hell's fury hath no equal.

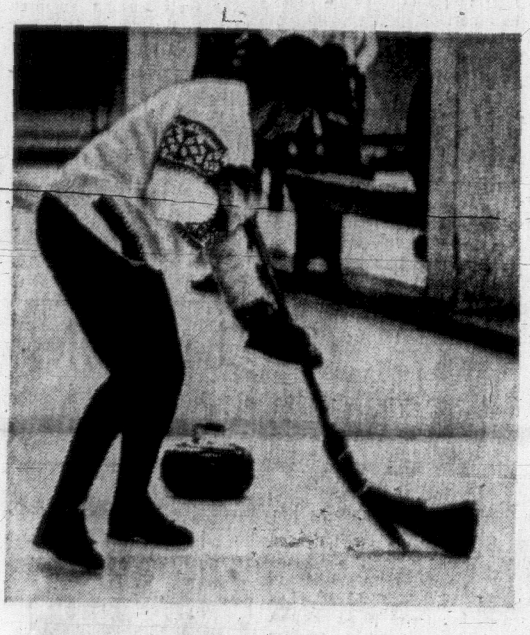

For some years, you see, I have been writing syndicated columns for weekly papers across the country. It was always like putting a note in a bottle and throwing it to the tides. The wildest heresies seemed not to disturb my distant readers. Then, emboldened by this apparent ennui or tacit agreement, I wrote my brief essay on lady curlers and the roof, so to speak, fell in.

★ ★ ★

I freely admit now that I hadn't done my usual homework. I had actually seen ladies' curling only once, at Winnipeg's famed Granite Club, and that was years ago. Still, the lasting impression, that the game was anti-feminine, anti-romance and anti-sex, was so vivid that I was able to build up what I fancied to be an overwhelming case against women on ice.

Last night, as I made my apprehensive way to the Victoria Curling Club, I was remembering all too clearly how my thesis developed.

If a woman-hater spent a lifetime trying to devise something that would show off females to the least possible advantage, I had said, this would be it. Was it not significant I asked, that the women of Europe, elegant, charming, alluring graceful women, wouldn't be found dead in a rink?

Would Brigitte Bardot or Vanessa Redgrave or Margot Fonteyn be seen in those funny, lumpy costumes and terrible tams, flushed with the exertion of "the roaring game?"

I was remembering, too, the incredible response to that piece, the resolutions passed by ladies' curling clubs from Alberni to Cote St. Luc, Que., the flood of angry letters to my editors, the half dozen cancelled subscriptions, the phone calls from lady curlers closer to home, threatening to do me all manner of indignity or injury.

So there I was, at the ladies' evening league of the Victoria Curling Club, and as I went through the door and mounted the stairs my first impression was that I either had the wrong place or the wrong time or both.

The foyer was crowded with men. They were all sitting there, facing the same way, silent and enormously contemplative. There is a hooded, introspective look peculiar to men who are watching women. I have seen it at the beach at Cannes, at Toronto's Victory Burlesque, at a thousand European sidewalk cafes — oh, all sorts of places. But what in the world could account for it here, of all places, in a Victoria curling rink?

My questing gaze followed theirs through an immense sheet of plate glass and there they were — the lady curlers, large as life, and I knew in a trice, whatever a trice may be, that I was in for some word eating.

What has happened, though I seem to have been the last man to discover it, may be described in two words: stretch pants. Stretch pants are made from an elasticized synthetic which has a truly spectacular adhesive effect. As the fabric for a curling costume it is ideal on two counts. One is that it keeps the lady curler warm. The other is that it makes the lady curler an altogether splendid sight to gaze upon.

As I joined the gentlemen watchers under glass in their highly strategic location abaft of the lady curlers, Gary Leibel, who is the club's assistant manager, took the seat next to mine and gave me a brief rundown on the progress of the game here.

"Besides our own club there's Esquimalt and Playland in Saanich and the Racquet Club, all with thriving ladies' leagues," Gary said. Together we gazed implacably through the glass. "It really got going here in the beginning because so many Victorians come from the prairies and many women curled in self-defence, you might say, since the game was so popular with men. Now all sorts of younger women are joining in and they're dedicated to the game."

★ ★ ★

"The . . . ah . . . the costume seems to have changed since I last looked," I said, We were watching a splendid lady curler making her delivery, a graceful glide on one knee, a position which she held like a ballet dancer as the rock went down the ice. We were not watching the rock.

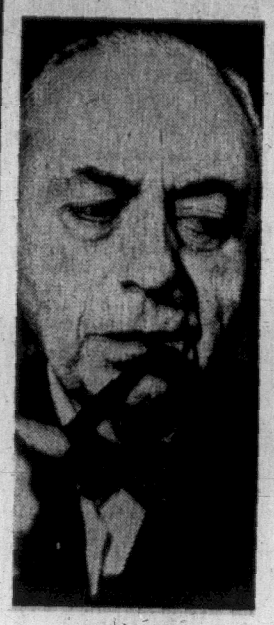

"Oh, yes, the costume," Gary said. "That's part of it, too. Before the stretch pants they had to wear all sorts of thick, bulky clothing. You might say that the stretch pants revolutionized the game."

"I would say that," I agreed.

At this point we were joined by Mrs. Flora Martin who, it turned out, has been four times the champion lady curler of Vancouver Island, a trim, blue-eyed figure in a gray blue and green cardigan and those pants. Happily enough, Mrs. Martin was not aware that she was in the company of The Man Who Hates Lady Curlers.

"Yes," said Mrs. Martin, "The sport is growing all the time. It's great fun, good for the figure, and wonderful for a competitive team effort. It really is a game with a new look."

"Oh, Mrs. Martin," said I, the new lover of lady curlers, "You are so very right."

HADDOCK
'good for morale'

Plastic Wreaths To Stay

The plastic imitation holly wreaths adorning Victoria's cluster lamp standards will have to stay, Mayor Courtney Haddock said today.

Because the wreaths were bought by the Downtown Victoria Association, there is little the city can do to change the situation, Haddock said.

The mayor had expressed surprise Tuesday that the wreaths were used because he thought it was agreed they were "ugly."

He said he has been too busy to take time to examine them but hoped to do so sometime today.

'LIKE HOLDING GUN TO FELLOW'S HEAD'

By AB KENT

A proposal by Mayor Courtney Haddock to have Victoria businessmen pay for renovations to the city police "officers' mess" was described by an alderman today as "away out of line."

The proposal came to light when a businessman told the Times he was surprised and annoyed by the mayor's suggestion that he put up $200 for a new carpet and furnishings in the mess. Serving eight senior officers, the modest room is located on the top floor of the police station.

Another, who questioned the proposal that individuals subscribe to the refurbishing, said: "I was a little choked up when I first heard about it . . . it is like holding a gun to a fellow's head. We support the police in many ways and we certainly don't have to do this."

A third business operator, who hadn't heard of the proposal, refused to take it seriously when told about it. "You must be putting me on," he said.

●

Mayor Haddock, who is an honorary member of the mess and as mayor is chairman of Victoria police commission, said the mess membership is too small to "maintain a good mess," and that more honorary members were sought.

He said the "one-shot" subscription would indicate community support for the police department and be good for morale at a time when police in North America are coming under increasing criticism.

Alderman Clyde Savage thought businessmen are aware of the problems police have to face and are willing to co-operate in a number of ways.

"But asking them to subscribe financially is away out of line.

"If the work is necessary it should go through proper channels (the police commission and city council). I think this is embarrassing to businessmen," said Savage.

Ald. Hugh Ramsay was cautious when asked if he was aware of the proposal. He said he had not heard of it and wanted to question the mayor and Police Chief John Gregory.

"If the mayor is doing this, at least it's once removed from the police," Ramsay added.

Haddock said the police department is functioning in a bigger city and needs stability to help it promote orderliness. Giving the officers a better mess is "an ordinary procedure, good for morale that works down through the ranks," he said.

●

Among some members of the department there is a "depressed feeling," because salaries are not equal to others in the area. Some policemen do not earn enough to qualify for NHA mortgages, the mayor said.

"We want them to be completely incorruptible but they are coming under greater abuse. We've got to let the department know the public is behind them. They are a good department with an efficient chief," Haddock said.

The mayor did not explain how the plight of the ordinary policeman would be improved by refurbishing the officers' mess which has only eight members.

A number of citizens are already honorary members of the police officers' mess, which serves as a lounge during coffee breaks and rest periods and for social functions when liquor is sometimes served.

It was created when the police building underwent complete renovation five years ago, and was furnished with a tile floor and utilitarian furniture.

●

He said he had contributed $100 to the refurnishing and that the normal honorary membership fee is $10 a year.

A spokesman for Woodward's Contract Sales Division said the store has a contract to furnish the police officers' mess.

The mayor questioned the fact that the subscription plan was being criticized.

Moon Rock Display Set For Victoria This Month

The lunar sample recovered from the moon by U.S. astronauts will be on display in the Provincial Museum for five days starting Dec. 16.

The rock is on a tour of Canada but will only be shown in Victoria in British Columbia, Wilma Wood, educational officer, said today.

"We applied to have it shown here a year ago," she said. "The interest we took in having the rock exhibited here is the main reason it is being sent to Victoria."

Organizers of the rock tour are the National Museum of Science and Technology, the U.S. information service and NASA. It will be exhibited in other provinces.

It will be displayed in the museum's foyer and on view between the hours of 10 a.m. and 4:30 p.m.

VICTORIA DRIVER KILLED

The driver of the truck has been charged with manslaughter.

★ ★ ★

Winder was alone in his car at the time of the accident, just after noon.

An installer with the Canadian Telephone and Supply Co., at the time of the accident, Winder was on loan to the B.C. Telephone Co. and working on a project at Nelson.

Educated in Oak Bay schools, he was to have married Bonnie Draper of Vernon Dec. 12.

★ ★ ★

He is survived by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Glen R. Winder, 927 Redfern, and paternal grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. John Winder of Calgary.

Funeral services will be held at 3 p.m. Monday in McCall's Chapel, to be followed by interment at Royal Oak Burial Park.

KILLER DOGS ON PROWL

Special Sheep Area Urged

Metchosin farmer G. H. Mitchell of Sea Bluff Farm has called on Agriculture Minister Cyril Shelford to designate a special sheep protection area to stop flocks being molested by prowling dogs.

His application is accompanied by a petition signed by 90 sheep owners between View Royal and Otter Point.

Mitchell says that in two years 307 sheep from a total of 1,185 had been lost to dogs. This, says Mitchell, represents a yearly percentage loss of more than 12 per cent. In addition to the fatalities, many other sheep had been injured.

Average flocks in the area, says Mitchell, are about 17 head, but owners would increase their flocks if menace from dogs was cut down. Other sheep owners, he added, had gone out of business because of dogs.

"If dogs were better controlled the sheep population would probably expand again as sheep do well here and it is the traditional economic use of land here."

Mitchell also backed up his submission with a petition signed by 98 people — not sheep - owners — living in the residential areas of Albert Head, Glen Lake and Happy Valley. All asked for better control of dogs, even if it meant an increase of dog tax.

Mitchell pointed out that an order-in-council was in effect from 1940 to 1959, creating a Metchosin-Sooke sheep protection area. He suggested this could be re-imposed with provision for proper enforcement.

CANDIDATE MEETINGS NEXT WEEK

Four all-candidate public meetings have been arranged next week for the Dec. 12 Saanich municipal elections.

They are:

Monday 7:30 p.m., Mount Douglas School; Tuesday 7:30 p.m., Prospect Lake Community Hall; Wednesday 7:30 p.m., Mount View School; Thursday 7:30 p.m., Reynolds School.

Six men are seeking the four aldermanic vacancies. The meetings were arranged by the Saanich Action Committee.

BACK WHEN HE SERVED with the RCMP, David Beeching was chiefly occupied with man's inhumanity to man. These years, as SPCA branch manager for Victoria, he works to ease the tribulations imposed by man on the creatures with which he shares this planet.

"How do you care for a sick iguana?" Dave asked when we talked this week. "We got hit with that one not so long ago."

The question is rhetorical, since the iguana proved to be past saving. But the neurotic squirrel monkey that turned up one day at the shelter was luckier.

The monk had lost all his frisk and frolic. Curled in a ball at the back of his cage, he showed no interest in living. He wouldn't eat, he wouldn't play, and friendly overtures brought no response.

"He was suffering from the stress that can overtake a tribal animal separated from his kind," Dave explained. "But we found a cure for that."

They are novel, they are different, and many of those who buy them do so on impulse. Problems arise. The exotics require special care and feeding. All too often, it's only a matter of time before their owners get tired of the fuss and bother such pets impose.

Then, like the stress-afflicted little creature for which Dave Beeching found a cure, they may become SPCA charges.

Here's a partial list of exotics turned over to Vancouver SPCA in the last few months.

Three coati-mundis (tree-dwellers that look somewhat like long-tailed, long-nosed racoons); two ocelots, one iguana, one parrot; and 15 monkeys of various species.

"What it amounts to," says Dave, "is a slave trade in immature animals. The death-rate is terrific, and the drain on some species is so heavy that they've been placed on the endangered list."

British Columbia SPCA units have asked for a meeting with provincial authorities to discuss this matter of exotics. They hope the government will see fit to prohibit the importation of many species except under special licence.

★

The SPCA branches have also asked government to outlaw the leg-hold beaver trap in favor of the Conibear trap — invented by Frank Conibear of Victoria — which kills almost instantly.

But even the widely-used Conibear trap is held to be less than perfect, and this fact is a matter of concern to the Canadian Federation of Humane Societies.

"A lot of people think of trapping as a thing of the past," Dave Beeching told me, "but the fact is that three to five million pelts are taken in Canada each year. It would be unfair to call the trapper cruel, but trapping is, and the federation hopes to make it less so."

With that in mind, a search for the perfect trap was begun about a year ago by a Federation-appointed committee.

Some of the backing for this endeavor comes from the Hudson's Bay Company—oldest trapper in the field through a $4,000 research grant.

Backing has also been supplied by the B.C. government: a $2500 grant, boosted by a percentage of the royalties levelled on each pelt.

Its probable that even the perfect trap, if it arrives upon the scene, won't represent the perfect answer to those who wish the fur trade out of existence.

But if kill 'em we must, at least let it be done swiftly. And who's to say that the wild furbearers' fate isn't better than that of many a disowned and unclaimed pet which ends its days in a pound?

SQUIRRELLY WIN IN BULBY TIFF

LONDON (AP) — The squirrels won the battle of Regent's Park today, and U.S. Ambassador Walter Annenberg's crocus bulbs will just have to suffer.

The gardeners who tend the grounds around sumptuous Wingfield House, the ambassador's residence, planted 6,000 of spring's early bloomers, and the word spread round the grey squirrel world like wildfire. It seems they just can't resist crocus bulbs.

SHOT FIVE

The embassy asked the park authorities what to do.

"Shoot them, that's the only way," one official said. "They simply can't be trapped, they're too smart."

This won't do, said the ambassador, and he ordered the shooting stopped.

The crocus crisis was reported on prime television time Tuesday night.

"I had quite a night," said a spokesman at the embassy. "Everybody who thinks he knows about squirrels rang up, suggesting this poison, that poison, rat killer and whatnot. One of the great ideas was a high-pitched whining sound from a special flute. That's supposed to drive them crazy.

"Anyway the squirrels have won for the present."

Look to Open Road For Dates on Campus

Now a Victoria resident, Vancouver-born York recently started a three-man group called Jon York and the Open Road which played its first engagement Saturday at the University of Victoria cabaret, the Jampot.

The group consists of York on guitar, Stephen Elliott, new head of the Victoria Conservatory of Music, on guitar, and Larry Underhill (from Chicago) on mouth harp and bongos.

It's an accoustical group, York said in an interview, with music ranging through the folk, country and blues genres, and even period music. They hope eventually to have a sound something like the English group The Pentangle.

ONE-NIGHTERS

They will play one-nighters mainly at universities, York said, because the bulk of their audience is on the campuses. Their next appearance will be at a Port Alberni coffee house on Saturday.

York wants to stay away from rock. He doesn't like to play an amplified instrument or sing loudly, but that's exactly what he was forced to do to make a living in bars and nightclubs over the last three years.

He also feels campus, concert and coffee house audiences are more appreciative of his music than the bar and nightclub patrons.

Another York idea is to record a B.C. centennial album which would include songs representative of the 1871-1971 period interspersed with spoken passages by old-timers.

He has applied to the Canada Council for a grant to undertake the project, and if he is successful he will record the album with Baroka Records of Vancouver, with whom he has an open contract.

B.C. Urges $1 Billion Export Fund

In a speech prepared for delivery to the B.C. Federation of Agriculture meeting today in New Westminster, Shelford said the money should be made available at 2½ per cent interest by the Bank of Canada.

The fund should have one director from each province and could serve other than agricultural groups, he said.

Such a move would help farmers and others in the low-income bracket to have a better standard of living, Shelford said.

"Pointing to the wonderful standard of living of the more fortunate Canadians isn't good enough," he said. "It is the bottom group we must lift up in the 70s, otherwise our nation will fall apart."

"The rural poor have been disgracefully neglected," Shelford said, suggesting that cutting back agricultural production to domestic requirements would be virtually impossible.

"The alternative is to gear the industry to participate strongly in international trade," he said.

Murder Appeal Dismissed

The British Columbia court of appeal Tuesday dismissed an appeal by Frederick James Morry against his conviction in the March 14, 1968 beating death of Victoria hotel clerk Bruce Van Munster.

Morry was sentenced to life imprisonment after being found guilty a year ago. He appealed on claims that certain statements should not have been admitted as evidence at his trial.

He also claimed that the trial judge should not have refused an application for a new trial made on claims that publicity concerning the incident was prejudicial to him.

The high court upheld the trial decisions made by Mr. Justice R. A. B. Wootton.

Garry Hugh McWhirter, charged jointly with Morry, had his appeal for a new trial dismissed after the two were convicted in New Westminster. He is also serving life imprisonment.

Van Munster's badly decomposed body was found under an abandoned car in the Prospect Lake area in July, 1968, more than four months after he disappeared.

Rural Area Subdivision Code Set

Subdivision regulations designed to ensure "safe, healthful, fair, efficient and attractive" subdivision of land throughout the province have been approved by Municipal Affairs Minister Dan Campbell.

The regulations, drawn up after five years of study by an inter-departmental committee, will apply to parts of the province without municipal or regional regulations. They do not apply to Community Planning Area 24 including the Gulf Islands and others parts of the Greater Victoria district where a 10-acre subdivision minimum is in effect.

Campbell said the regulations will be administered by the department of highways.

"The province has provided a foundation on which the regional districts can build," Campbell said. Regional regulations, when passed, will take precedence over the provincial rules.

DOCTOR:

Why So Early With Santa Claus?

Santa Claus seems to be everywhere these days. On television, in department stores, and of course, in the hearts of children.

This year, he visited the Hillside Shopping Centre in the middle of November.

This made Morrison angry, so he fired off a letter to the centre's manager R. Talbot protesting "the usual con game of Santa Claus that we parents have to tolerate each year."

Interviewed Tuesday, Morrison said he is not opposed to Santa Claus in principle. What he doesn't like is the push for Christmas dollars so early in the year.

He said the advertising and all the Santas about town pressure parents into thinking there's only one way to enjoy the holiday.

"The parents have a subtle feeling that they have to conform. It's unfair to put this undue pressure on them," he said.

Extending Christmas advertising into November, he said, prostitutes the holiday.

"I'm not pushing the Christian thing either. I would like to have the freedom to celebrate Christmas as I feel it should be."

Morrison said everyone should celebrate Christmas as he likes, but all this advertising suggests that the only way to do it is to spend money.

He said in his letter he had never before protested a "social injustice." And he called for others to join his opposition.

"If I gain nothing more than the fact that I have followed my true feelings, I have gained a lot."

Basques Kidnap Consul

Times News Services

SAN SEBASTIAN, Spain — Basque terrorists, following Quebec's FLQ terrorist tactics, have kidnapped an honorary West German consul here and are holding him hostage for 15 Basque nationals awaiting trial.

Eugene Beihl, 59, was kidnapped from his home. Witnesses said Beihl, who represents several German industrial firms in Spain, drove into his garage Tuesday night, then drove out again with several men in his car.

The 15 defendents are charged with banditry and terrorism and 12 are expected to be linked to the terrorist group when the trial starts Thursday.

Witness Released

A 20-year-old man was released from jail Tuesday when he pledged in provincial court that he would be available to testify as a material witness in a non-capital murder case later this month.

Byron Jack Dobbs was ordered released by Judge William Ostler on his own recognizance of $1,000, and told to report once a week to Inspector Norman Bath of Victoria police.

Bath said Dobbs had some "very important evidence" regarding a non-capital murder charge against William Larlham, 20, Gary Smith, 18, both of CFB Esquimalt, and Terrence Parsons, 20, of 1329 Newport.

They were charged Nov. 13 in connection with the death of part-time taxi driver and local athlete Gerald Mulholland, 37, of 917 Bewdley.

Preliminary hearing in the case has been set for Dec. 23, 28 and 29 before Ostler.

Big Farm Monopoly 'Threat'

NEW WESTMINSTER, B.C. (CP)—Consumers will pay higher food prices if integrated farms take over control of sections of the agricultural industry, Bob Blair, president of the 12,000-member British Columbia Federation of Agriculture, said Tuesday.

In an interview at the first day of the federation's two-day annual meeting, he said that large integrated farms—which own or control land and produce feed, fertilizer, animals and products—could take over the poultry industry in Canada and end competition, resulting in higher prices.

Such farms already exist in Manitoba and Quebec, he said.

Meanwhile, delegates to the meeting asked the provincial government to enter the automobile insurance field to cover farm tractors; and asked for a decrease in welfare expenditures.

Film-Makers To Give Show

Apartheid in U.S.

WASHINGTON (AP) — Senator Abraham Ribicoff (Dem., Conn.) has told his colleagues the No. 1 issue facing the United States is the rapid growth of apartheid in the country. With that, he introduced two bills designed to help end the division of races. Specifically, the measures would tie desegregation of schools in the cities to suburban integration.

Stanfield Vows Full Support To Henderson

Mr. Henderson told the Commons public accounts committee that the government had decreased the effectiveness of the auditor-general staff by cutting salaries and diminishing job classifications.

Meanwhile Mr. Stanfield told a news conference that he has urged Conservative MPs to make a public assault on a government bill that would restrict the powers of the auditor-general.

Mr. Henderson's job is to report to Parliament—not the government—on the operations of federal departments, including cases of waste and inefficiency. He has raised government hackles with exposures of the refit expenses for the aircraft carrier Bonaventure, and costs of studies of a Prince Edward Island causeway.

BILL RESTRICTS POWERS

The accounts committee is studying a government bill introduced last month that would restrict the auditor-general's power to comment on government waste.

The bill would limit his role to book-keeping—auditing the accounts kept by individual departments.

Mr. Henderson told the committee the government had already tried to impair his effectiveness by downgrading the "core of my staff—the guts of my office."

Twenty-eight directors and regional directors had been dropped one salary grade in 1969.

"Nowhere else, including the treasury board, has there been such a wholesale downgrading," Mr. Henderson said.

After he had complained to Treasury Board President C. M. Drury, who has criticized Mr. Henderson's activities, a committee was set up to assess the salary structure of the staff. The committee confirmed the downgrading in a report a year ago.

The government had rejected repeated requests for explanations of the downgrading, the auditor-general said.

Mr. Stanfield promised unrelenting Conservative opposition to the bill when it comes to the Commons for second reading.

MUZZLE TRY DENIED BY DRURY

OTTAWA (CP) — C. M. Drury, president of the treasury board, denied today that there is any government attempt to muzzle Auditor-General Maxwell Henderson.

Drury, appearing before the Senate finance committee, said he hopes Mr. Henderson will continue untrammelled in his job as watchdog of the treasury on behalf of Parliament.

Ottawa Abandons Price Curb

Times News Services

OTTAWA—The federal Prices and Incomes Commission is abandoning its guidelines for price and salary increases at the end of this year but is to continue investigating inflationary factors in the next few months without firm criteria.

Dr. John Young, head of the commission, said Tuesday the policing body has terminated an agreement struck with business leaders in February of this year to limit price increases to less than corresponding cost increases, a move which put a severe squeeze on profits in private industry.

Young, after a day-long meeting with business leaders Tuesday, said the commission had asked the industrialists voluntarily to extend the agreement through the first six months of 1971.

SLACK IN ECONOMY

A declaration drafted by the commission and 50 top business leaders at the Tuesday meeting pointed out that business conditions are uncertain, there is slack in the economy and government is moving toward stimulation of activity to counter feared record winter unemployment.

Under these conditions "and without wholehearted support and parallel action on the part of labor and government," the statement said, the continuation of formal restraints in 1971 "would no longer be warranted."

When the commission, created by Prime Minister Pierre Elliot Trudeau in the face of a growing inflation problem, conceived its six per cent guidelines in February of this year they were to be the basis of a three-party agreement between government, business and labor.

SALARIES UP

Business and government reached agreement and in most cases maintained it. Labor made no commitment and the commission, with no real powers, was only able to look on helplessly while boosts of 18, 20 and even 25 per cent in salary contracts were ratified.

Young said Tuesday he does not think abandonment of the

DEPUTY TO DOUGLAS SEEKS NDP LEADERSHIP

OTTAWA (CP) — David Lewis, 61-year-old deputy leader of the New Democratic Party, formally announced today his candidacy for his party's leadership at its April convention here.

But he would not be so foolhardy to take as granted an April victory.

Put Mine Waste in Ground, Salmon Group Urges Utah

By DOUG MacRAE
Times Staff

PORT HARDY — Put it back, says the Pacific Salmon Society.

The society was one of four objectors heard today at a pollution control board hearing here into an application on behalf of a multi-million dollar copper-molybdenum mining corporation.

The U.S.-based Utah Construction and Mining Company wants to dump 9.3 million gallons of solid mine wastes daily into Rupert Inlet.

Salmon Society representative Patrick Moore, in a brief prepared for the hearing, suggested stockpiling the waste from the strip mining operation, then replacing it in stages as the mining progresses.

Later today, pollution control director William Venables denied he had said Utah Construction and Mining Co. had

Venables was quoted by the Vancouver Province this morning as saying the Utah project would go ahead as planned despite today's hearing into the pollution aspect of the mine-mill complex.

"Until I put my signature on the necessary documents, nothing here is decided . . . I have no authority to determine whether or not this mine will function," said Venables.

The company said its discharge would contain mine tailings and residual quantities of cyanide, zinc, and reagents normally associated with mining and milling operations.

The mine-mill project, at a site 10 miles south of here, is well along in construction, with initial deliveries to a Japanese buyer scheduled for early 1972.

Grandmother Battles Mine Giant In Bid to Halt Sea Pollution

Times Staff

PORT HARDY — Mrs. Elaine Price is a young grandmother from Duncan who stood up today to a giant mining corporation on the matter of environment.

She'd rather an expert speak instead but she is one of only four allowed to be heard in opposition to the Utah dumping application and she's ready to give it her best.

"I sincerely hope the director (William Venables, the province's director of pollution control) is not mocking the ordinary citizen who is deeply concerned about the environment in British Columbia," she says in her four-page brief.

"But the set-up of this hearing would certainly lead one to doubt the bona fides of the whole procedure."

Venables had earlier ruled he would only hear the four objectors who confirmed their stand by a second letter after the pollution control branch received close to 150 objections to granting the mine dumping permit earlier this year.

Mrs. Price is a member of the Cowichan-Malahat branch of SPEC and that organization helped her prepare as best she could for today's presentation.

Kurt Horn, president of the SPEC branch, said today Mrs. Price worried so much about appearing at the hearing she became physically ill.

Munro Attacks Man-Made Murk

WINNIPEG (CP) — Health service leaders must extend preventive medicine practices from the bedside into the physical and social environment, including areas of low-cost housing, automobile safety, and air and water pollution controls, Health Minister John Munro said today.

KIDNAPPED West German Consul Eugene Beihl is being held hostage in San Sebastian, Spain, by Basque terrorists. See story Page 52.

"It is downright inefficient to be constantly treating people for respiratory ailments and lung problems if the air a patient breathes outside doctors' offices, hospitals, clinics, is capable of undoing all the treatment received within," Munro told delegates to the third annual Manitoba Health Conference.

"It is an insult to the practice of medicine if the water we ingest in so many ways contains pollutants with the power to out-fight or outlast our strongest medicines."

MAN-MADE

The federal minister told about 2,000 delegates that as people dedicated to the pursuit of human health, "health professionals cannot allow the menace of man-made murk to go on festering in our atmosphere and in our rivers and lakes."

He said "every conceivable pressure" must be brought to bear "to halt the polluters in their tracks now."

Munro said Canada's worst health problems, both mental and physical, are found in the poverty pockets.

SENSITIVE

He told the health professionals they must become more sensitive to the phenomenon of drug abuse among young people.

"The foremost need is information—objective, factual, non-moralistic information—that will reach experimenting youth and be believed by them."

He told a news conference the federal government will be introducing a drug program in a few months that will make available to drug abusers medical facilities, analytical services and information and education services.

Veteran Pensions Up 10%

OTTAWA (CP) — Veterans Affairs Minister Jean-Eudes Dube introduced legislation in the Commons today that would raise all veterans' pensions by 10 per cent by next April 1.

There will also be a 15-per-cent increase in veterans' allowances, the minister said, before the legislation received first reading.

Under the bill, a married person receiving 100-per-cent disability pension would receive an increase of $408 to $4,464 annually. A single person eligible for 100-per-cent disability pension would get a raise of $324 to $3,504 annually and a widow an increase of $240 to $2,640 a year.

The increase in the maximum allowances obtainable by a single veteran would rise $16 a month to $121 monthly. A married veteran would receive an additional $26 a month to $201 monthly.

RETAIN MEANS TEST

The veterans affairs minister said veterans will still be subjected to a means test under the new legislation.

The bill followed "the most extensive review of the pension act in half a century," Dube said.

$1 BUYS 100 CUPS OF MILK

Children who grow up without enough food can suffer brain damage, underdeveloped bodies and a host of other disorders.

Most of us do not know what real hunger means but, to millions of Asians, it is as familiar as sunlight and darkness, and just as recurrent.

The dollar you send to the children of Asia fund buys 100 cups of milk. Milk, of course, is a high-protein food. Protein shortages have become the world's greatest food problem.

The Unitarian Service Committee feeds and houses abandoned babies in Mokpo, Korea. Your donation to help their work will not eliminate hunger, but they will end somebody's hunger.

United Nations consultants say Korea has passed the stage of needing material relief and has entered an era of rehabilitation and economic development.

In 1969, the country's rate of economic growth was 12 per cent. But USC executive director Dr. Lotta Hitschmanova says the government continues to emphasize economic progress rather than solutions to social problems.

Less than three per cent of the government's budget pays for health and welfare programs, while 35 per cent goes to defence.

This adds up to a continuing demand for basic necessities. USC programs in Korea meet part of this demand.

Donations to the Times Children of Asia Fund can be mailed or delivered personally to the Times, 2631 Douglas.
